A Note from Rick: We had a good run of Holstein open heifers on Tuesday overall. The market was a little stronger than last month, but remember last month was pretty tough. There are a lot of farmers with a good supply of feed after a good crop year and the big question out there is where is the dairy cattle market in general is going to go. This market overall has been steadily struggling along over the past year and there is still nothing out there that I can see that gives any indication of things getting a whole lot better. With that said, there are a few things that concern me on the negative side. The beef prices are not as strong as they have been, which also affects calf prices. Milk prices do not show any sign of relief either and these two things are the main source of income for the end user of dairy cattle. The Dairy Farmers have had quite a struggle for a long time now and with cash flow continuing to be tight, I think dairy cattle could get cheaper. Butcher cows were steady to a little stronger. Butcher cattle and bull calves were steady to a little weaker. Unfortunately, we will not have our regular Tuesday sale on October 31st due to horse sale week. We are excited to christen the new sales arena. Come check out TLA!
