ABOUT LATENT PRINT SUITABILITY

This 2-day training class is designed for forensic science students and practitioners whom may be tasked with the examination of physical evidence to make suitability determinations as to any latent impressions developed on evidence. Attendees will learn more about the features of friction ridge examination and the visualization of impressions in order to make an informed decision regarding their suitability for collection and further examination. Virtual attendees will be given access to an online folder with materials for practical exercises and will need an ink pad available.

This course has been approved by the IAI Latent Print and Crime Scene Certification Boards for continuing education towards the certification programs.

In-Person attendees may be required to show proof of COVID Vaccination
