Determining Which People With Mental Health Conditions Should Be Disarmed is No Easy Task

Truth about Guns. By Dan Zimmerman -November 14, 2023
(Click the link above to read the entire article)

Mental illness again became a central theme after the mass shooting in Maine on Oct. 25, 2023, in which records suggest that the shooter had a history of serious mental health issues. Months before the tragedy, the family of gunman Robert Card, as well as Army Reserve staffers, had contacted law enforcement expressing high levels of concern about his mental health and noting his access to guns.

The relationship between mental illness and guns, and risk mitigation, is complicated. Specifically, there is no clear and uniform consensus on who should determine when to restrict access to firearms – should it be a psychiatrist, an independent forensic psychiatrist, a committee of psychiatrists or a judge? The majority of people with mental illness do not seek treatment.

The bottom line is that determining who may or may not have access to firearms based on mental illness, as outlined, is indeed very challenging and requires more serious work. And the common denominator in all these tragedies still is the access to assault rifles.

NRA Armed Citizen from November 2023 Magazine

Three armed and masked suspects who tried to kick open the door of a home in Washington state scurried away when the homeowner fended off the apparent home invasion attempt with gunfire, video shows.

One of the masked individuals is heard yelling "Seattle police" before landing a kick on the home's door, according to the video.

The Auburn Police Department said that at about 2 a.m. Thursday, officers responded to a home over reports of a non-injury shooting. Auburn is located nearly 30 miles south of Seattle and 15 miles northeast of Tacoma.

Exposing Media Bias and Political Agendas in Gun Control Debates

In any fight over constitutional rights, it helps to understand just what you're up against, and when it comes to the Second Amendment, it's not just anti-gunners but the media and the way things are reported that can make all the difference in how the public perceives the message.

For example, according to a report in the Missouri Independent, House Democrats gathered for a Monday "roundtable forum" on proposed changes to U.S. gun laws, and only a couple of paragraphs into the story, one could see there was evidently no room at this particular table for representatives from any of the nation's gun rights organizations. Congressman Jamie Raskin (D-MD), a perennial anti-gunner, only mentioned the National Rifle Association in terms of groups pushing back against gun control, which the article described as "gun reform" or "gun safety legislation."

Winchester Ammunition is announcing a $100,000 pledge to the Folds of Honor Foundation, the third donation to the organization which provides educational scholarships to the spouses and children of fallen or disabled service members of the U.S. armed forces.

"Winchester has supported the U.S. military for more than 100 years by providing what the U.S. Warfighter needs to succeed on the battlefield" said Winchester President Brett Flaughter. "We are grateful to extend that support to the Folds of Honor mission, and to the spouses and children of those service members that have sacrificed all for our country."

The Winchester USA VALOR® collection of ammunition pays tribute to our military and first-responders while supporting Folds of Honor and providing support for the bearers of their legacy through educational scholarships. In 2023, more than 15 million rounds of USA VALOR ammunition have been sold in boxes featuring the Folds of Honor logo in support of their mission.
