

How would a young writer publish a book they have been working on?

Q: How would a young writer (9-12 years old) publish a book they have been working on? I'm in fifth grade and I've been typing on my computer for over two years, and still am.

While it's rare for publishers to publish books by children, it does happen occasionally. One publisher I can think of that did that is Stemmer House www.stemmer.com. You may also want to look at a website for Dawn of Day Children's Publishing <http://www.dawnofday.com/index.htm>, which is a company that is publishing books by young people between the ages of 6-18. They pay royalties and do marketing and distribution, though at present, they have only published a few titles. 1:2/04