Abstract: The drift of technology towards the field of education has laid benchmark with On-Line Learning Platform (OLLP) system. The OLLP is perceived differently by the respondents of different educational background and different age groups. Effective implementation of OLLP system is analysed in this paper by focussing on conduct of online courses to ensure system quality of OLLP, service quality and employability of subscribers. In this study the respondents have been chosen age wise, qualification wise and place of residence from Northern Region of India that aims to cover states of Haryana, Himachal Pradesh, Jammu and Punjab (excluding Chandigarh) as well as union territories like Chandigarh and Delhi.

Keywords: On-Line Learning Portal (OLLP) system, Online Tools, Online courses.

I. INTRODUCTION

Online education is evolving in urban as well as rural sectors of India. Awareness about smart classes have added up a new methodology in the era of education. The traditional classrooms have been replaced by smart classes within a span of time. To further enhance, digitalisation in the field of education is being promoted and there is emergence of On-Line Learning Portal (OLLP) system which promotes mobile classroom, 24 hours seven days availability of course content with instructor availability during the course. It is expected that OLLP should create vibrant learning environments wherein a user goes through life like an interactive experience. The objectives of this paper is to analyse the effectiveness of On-Line Learning Platform on the subscribers ability to enhance knowledge and employability. The place of residence, level of education and age are the main factors that influence the subscribers and that measures the service quality and other features of OLLP. This manuscript is developed to access educational resources from outside the institution on a global and instant basis, to obtain quick and easy way to create, update and revise course materials, to increase the flexible interaction with student through e-mail and discussion forums, to obtain location and time independent delivery of course materials such as course notes, diagrams, reading list, etc., to prepare quality-learning materials, ability to combine text, graphics and a limited amount of multimedia, enabling instructional designers, to increased learner control through hypertext based presentation of information, to obtain opportunities for international, cross culture and collaborative learning, ability to serve a large number of students at a potentially reduced cost, to develop self-learning ability. The flow of this research paper is: a. Section II provides the literature survey. b. Section III analyses the results and discussions. c. Section IV summarises the paper in Conclusion.

II. LITERATURE SURVEY

Stoyunova and Yovkov (2016) observed that effectiveness of education was the main concern throughout the whole human history. The effective and efficient education can be achieved by searching ways to shorten the time of learning and by achieving the desired results. There is no time and place limits in e-learning system. Anyone can learn via internet at any time and at any place. The e-learning system is designed to enrol a large number of students. Bhatt and Maniar (2017) observed that the institutions who do not realize the importance of E-learning, are lacking of knowledge. E-learning has become the necessity of modern education in Indian colleges and universities to compete the international standards as well as to attract the affordable international students. So the subjects, courses should be settled in this way so they may satisfies the international standards and needs of every student. Gencturk and Korucu (2017) conducted an experimental study on online users who use web 2.0 technologies. Web 2.0 is different from the previous web technologies. It is very helpful to the students for earning co-operative working habits. This technology is also helpful to improve skills of acquiring knowledge and learning. It has a very deep and positive impact on individual's development. Konwar (2017) concluded that Information and Technology such as internet, computer, mobile phones, television, radio and so on plays a pivotal role not just in the class but also in other fields. E-learning is a teaching and learning approach to increase educational achievements of students and it helps to minimize the cost and time in the academic achievements. E-learning is more beneficial in developing countries to provide better quality of education, to develop motivation and confidence among the students. Lone (2017) found that the teachers can't be replaced by the technology but they are complements of each other. In the education system, there are tremendous changes and the digital education has become the norm for the day. The websites, apps, videos, live chats and so on took the place of books. It is no more limited to printed materials. The technology can make the education reasonable as the expenditure of the education has been gradually growing for those who are unable to benefit. The e-Education is termed as 'edtech' now this helps to make learners adapt in the environment around them, increase their learning level and to develop creativity among them.

III. RESULTS AND FINDINGS

Respondents from various educational background and of different age, perceive OLLP system in their own way. To investigate the impact of online learning portals, a questionnaire was developed to collect data from the colleges, engineering colleges and universities of Northern India. The respondents from Chandigarh, Delhi, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh, Jammu and Punjab were selected. Graduate level as well as Post-Graduate level students were considered as respondents which took the online courses of a region for better insights.

There is difference of opinion in case of respondents from Himachal Pradesh and Jammu, as there is almost equal number of respondents that agree and disagree with the syllabus matching with university levels. The respondents from Punjab state totally disagree that the syllabus matches university syllabus levels.

The respondents from Himachal Pradesh are neutral or do not agree with the positive response for the services like online learning portal for the system is designed to suit the online use, services of OLLP are up-to-date, OLLP replies to the in-depth/ complex queries of the subject, OLLP provides courses according to university curriculum, Course content is easy to understand and adds to the knowledge and OLLP provides courses according to university curriculum. The reason is obvious from the rate of literacy and the remote location of the respondents from the major cities. Hence, they are not getting proper benefit from these features.

The respondents from Jammu are neutral or do not agree with the positive response for the services like online learning portal for the system is designed to suit the online use, course content is easy to understand and adds to the knowledge, OLLP provides courses according to university curriculum, the concepts/ skills are useful and meets for the academic and industrial needs and skills enhancement concepts are beneficial and advantageous. The reason is obvious from the rate of literacy and the remote location of the respondents from the major cities. Hence, they are not getting proper benefit from these features.

IV. CONCLUSION

Online learning plays an important role in development of education which turns up wheel of fortune in education sector. In the present paper, On-Line Learning Portal system acts as base for interactive learning system. According to analysis in the paper, The respondents from union territories of Chandigarh and Delhi have same opinion. The response from states of Haryana and Punjab received is positive, as majority of the respondents agree with the services of the online learning portal for the system. The respondents from Jammu and Himachal Pradesh are neutral or do not agree with the positive response for the services. The reason is obvious from the rate of literacy and the remote location of the respondents from the major cities. Hence, they are not getting proper benefit from these features. Analysis of contribution of various states and union territories as shown in the tables illustrated in the paper. This contribution depicts the number of students that have enrolled to OLLP system courses and have successfully completed the course.
