Prompt: To what extent were the foreign policies of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover isolationist?

Main Events/Ideas	Definitions/Explanations	Analysis
Answer: In the years following World War I, the United States pursued a unilateral foreign policy that used international investment, peace treaties, and select military intervention to promote a vision of international order, even while maintaining U.S. isolationism, which continued to the late 1930s. American foreign policy in the 1920's was largely isolationist; however this characterization is a bit misleading because the U.S. did participate in diplomatic efforts to maintain peace. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> U.S. occupation of Haiti and Nicaragua U.S. withdrawal from Dominican Republic Increased economic investments in Latin America Oil drilling rights in the Middle East League of Nations Washington Naval Conference, 1922-3 -Four Power Treaty, -Five-power Naval Treaty, -Nine Power Treaty Tariffs and retaliatory tariffs (Fordney-McCumber) The Dawes Plan, 1924 Economic negotiations in Mexico, 1927 Geneva Conference, 1927 Kellogg-Briand Pact, 1928 Clark Memorandum, 1930 	Foreign Policy: The Fiction of Isolation... Disarmament and Peace... Washington Naval Conference, 1921... <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Five-Power Treaty... Prompt: Compare and contrast historical viewpoints of the Roaring Twenties.

7. Food For Thought... Did Progressivism really end with WWI? Highlight Main Ideas and compare to your historical perspectives notes above.

At first glance, it might appear that the three Republican administrations of the 1920s sandwiched between the Democratic administrations of President Woodrow Wilson (1913-21) and President Franklin D. Roosevelt (1933-45) would have brought with them a period of conservatism, in much the same way that Ronald Reagan's election in 1980 might be viewed as a reaction against government growth and activism in the 1960s and 1970s. However, before FDR's administration, the Republicans were the party of government activism and the Democrats the party of conservatism. Furthermore, except for President Wilson's election that was the result of a temporary fracture of the Republican party into Republicans and Progressives, the Republicans, along with Republican ideas, dominated the White House. After Abraham Lincoln's presidency, Grover Cleveland was the only Democrat to hold the office until FDR. The ideas of Progressivism, found mostly in the Republican party, provided the intellectual foundation for the substantial growth of 20th century government.

Another factor relevant to the political environment in the 1920s was the relative balance of power between the president and Congress. During World War I, the balance of power tipped considerably toward the presidency, but the 1920s brought a reduced amount of power to the presidency, and increased the power of the Republican-dominated Congress. After the 1920 elections, Republicans held a majority of 303 to 131 in the House and 60 to 36 in the Senate and, particularly when compared with the previous two decades, the political agenda during the 1920s was more controlled by Congress than by the executive branch.

The theme of the Harding administration was a "return to normalcy," which must have sounded especially desirable after World War I. This theme was immediately adopted by Coolidge after Harding's death in 1923. One feature of this return, and an indicator of the conservatism of the Harding and Coolidge administrations, was the slashing of income tax rates, which involved considerable congressional debate. But when the income tax was established in 1913, the highest marginal tax rate was 7 percent; it was increased to 77 percent in 1916 to help finance the war. The top rate was reduced to as low as 25 percent in 1925, but that is substantially higher than the 7 percent rate prior to the war, and the income levels that defined the brackets had also been lowered substantially from their prewar levels. The "normalcy" of the 1920s actually incorporated considerably higher levels of federal spending and taxes than the Progressive era before World War I.

The Progressive movement, and the Progressive party, remained vital through the 1920s, the difference being that the Republicans had been able to regain the support of Progressives. In 1924, the Progressive party ran Robert LaFollette, a Republican Senator from Wisconsin, as their presidential candidate. LaFollette gained a respectable 13 percent of the popular vote. Despite the three-way race, Coolidge still won a 54 percent majority, which contrasts sharply with the 1912 election in which the Progressive party split the Republican vote and led to the loss of the Republican incumbent. Normalcy, in the Harding-Coolidge sense, meant peace and prosperity, but it also meant a continuation of the principles of Progressivism, which enabled the Republican Party to retain the support of its Progressive element. Despite the popular view of the 1920s as a retreat from Progressivism, by any measure government was more firmly entrenched as a part of the American economy in 1925 than in 1915, and was continuing to grow. Harding and Coolidge were viewed as pro-business, and there may be a tendency to equate this pro-business sentiment as anti-Progressivism. The advance of Progressivism may have been slower than before the war or during the New Deal, but a slower advance is not a retreat.

The Hoover administration, from 1929 to 1933, must be analyzed differently because of the onset of the Great Depression, but compared with his immediate predecessors, it is much easier to make the case that Hoover was an active supporter of increased government involvement in the economy. Hoover served in the Wilson administration as head of the United States Food Administration beginning in 1917 and, as Secretary of Commerce throughout the Harding-Coolidge administrations, was the most active Cabinet member in pursuing increased government involvement in the economy. From 1929 to 1933, under President Hoover's administration, real per capita federal expenditures increased by 88 percent. Under President Roosevelt's administration from 1933 to 1940, just before World War II, they increased by only 74 percent. Although Hoover started from a lower base, in percentage terms expenditures under Hoover increased more in four years than during the next seven New Deal years. If a case can be made that federal policies under the Harding and Coolidge administrations were a solidification and extension of Progressive principles, the case is much more easily made for President Hoover's administration.

9. Food For Thought: Made In America... the Art of Cool

Read the excerpt, highlight main ideas, and then answer the questions in the spaces provided.

Born in New Orleans around 1900, jazz was the first genre of music to inspire a worldwide mania for all things American (which often meant all things African American), especially in Western Europe. Drawing from blues and ragtime, the genre also folded the jaunty-yet-soulful marching music of traditional New Orleans' funeral processions into its ingredient list. Before long, jazz spread north, following the wave of African-Americans migrating from the rural South to big Northern cities, and soon it took hold in places like Chicago and New York City, with pioneers like Louis Armstrong, Ferdinand Joseph LaMothe (better known as Jelly Roll Morton), and Duke Ellington.

Jazz was more than just a new kind of music: it was a part of a broader style, "American Cool," which quickly became America's top export. And while there's nothing less cool than trying to explain "cool," we'll give it a shot in the interest of the historical record.

What caused the Great Migration?

What effect did the Great Migration have on America?

An emotional style focused-paradoxically- on minimizing emotion, "being cool" likely began in African-American culture as a way for individuals to passively deflect the psychological hurt inflicted by white racism. In American Cool, effortless mastery of both oneself and one's context became expressed through verbal and body language, or lack thereof: the cool American is calm, unfazed, even slightly jaded or blasé. This new emotional minimalism was part of a long-term shift in what society modeled as "proper" emotional behavior. In the nineteenth century Victorian period, individuals were expected to control the extreme feelings raging just beneath the surface; by the twentieth century, they were supposed to be truly, inwardly detached from those feelings, skeptical of any passion except for "natural" urges like hunger and sexual desire.

Along with this general attitude and demeanor, mainstream America also picked up the aesthetic trappings associated with African-American cool: a combination of high and low. This juxtaposition was visible in every area of life, from fashion to art to language, and was particularly true for younger Americans who fought in WWI or came of age shortly afterward—the so called Lost Generation. These disillusioned and dissolute teens and young adults fixated on all the things their elders tried to ignore, and the "low" part of American Cool manifested in a fascination with illegal or illicit behavior and the renunciation of traditional morality, including tramps and hobos, criminals and private eyes, dive bars and flophouses, drugs and alcohol. (At least, in cities. Rural American remained a bit square, holding fast to traditional values.) One example of this renunciation was the risqué "flapper" fashion embraced by young women of the day.

...the idea of "cool" quickly spread through mainstream culture, giving rise to scores of expressions: you can "be cool," "stay cool," "play it cool," "keep it cool," "lose your cool," "cool it," "cool your heels," or "cool your jets." We all want to make a "cool million," and someone can be a "cool customer," "cool cat," "cool as a cucumber," "coolheaded," or just "really cool." Before long (surprise!) the concept was co-opted by corporate America and soon anything could be cool. By the 1950s you could eat "Cool Whip," wear "Cool-Ray" sunglasses, paint your nails with cool Cutex polish, drink cool 7-Up, grill with cool A-1 sauce, or "jazz up" your salad with cool French dressing. For some reason it was extra-cool to spell the word with a "K" in brand names – e.g., Kool cigarettes, Kool-Aid, Dura-Kool fabrics... the list goes on.

Of course, cool wasn't the only new slang being slung in America. "Hip" and "hipster," coined by jazz musicians, referred to the typical position of a supine opium smoker, lying sideways on his or her hip, leading to the coded inquiry: "Are you hip?" (Erik Sass, The Mental Floss History of the United States)

What evidence can you pull from this excerpt to help you explain the influence of African American culture on the changing, modern American culture of the Roaring Twenties?
