Don't go there

Don't go to Mallory courts where scum is welcomed with open arms, welcome to run, jump, skip and hop caroding everything it seems to touch.

Where litter and trash yanks at your feet when you walk, paper bags,, alcohol bottles, cigarette butts and needles.

The scenery is a stuffed up and smelly as an abandoned over used junkyard. Yuk.

Where police stop to rest and let the action come to them.

Drug dealers make their sells and users get their dose, they are feins at the corner store, it is a museum a mixture of old and new methods.

Age is not a factor as long as you have paper, for the love of money children are given alcohol before the age of twenty-one to many, at the corner store.

Don't go where the streets are dark and scary the night falls heavy not even the moonshine can bring you feeling.

Like a claustrophobic child in a small locked closet you want to get to the other side, where there is not shattered glass on the floor and where the street lights work.

Don't go to the old stank basket ball court that is used for a personal restroom no one ever goes there to shoot hoop the stench is too strong it burns the hairs in my nose.

Where the playground is fresh, shinning bright as a bulb, rainbow complexion of blue, yellow and red, the ground is made turf not gravel or sawdust.

But the children don't play there they want come out all because they know any where in Mallory courts you don't want to go.
