“So’s YOUR FATHER’S MUSTACHE!”

by Samuel Olson

“So’s Your Father’s Mustache!”

[From Urban Dictionary: A retro semi-insult used either in annoyance or to contradict an assertion.]

From the Rockland Standard of March 27, 1912:

Alonzo Osborne had a narrow escape. When soldering a gasoline tank that had not been used for some months, the tank exploded knocking him across the room. One side of his face was burned resulting in the loss of half of his mustache.

It was not reported whether Alonzo, a well-known “hen man” from Assinippi, shaved off the rest of his mustache or effected a new style. Later, with mustache or not, he held the position of head of poultry operations at the Lawson estate in Scituate.

One way of dating photographs with a degree of accuracy is not only noting clothing worn, but also noting facial hair, or lack of it, among the adult males. For instance, photos of crowds of men taken before 1960 show virtually all wearing some sort of head gear. John F. Kennedy’s penchant of going hatless became the norm for most men after 1960.

A good baseline to determine a time period when men went beardless, bearded, or mustached would be photos of our presidents. Our first bearded president was Lincoln (1861-65) followed by Grant (1869-77), Hayes (1877-81), Garfield (1881) and Benjamin Harrison (1889-93).

Our town’s namesake, Henry Norwell, sported “friendly mutton chops” in the late 1800s—side whiskers connected by a mustache.

Mustaches prevailed after clean-shaven McKinley (1897-1901), with Theodore Roosevelt (1901-1909) and Taft (1909-13).

It is believed that the trend toward clean-shaven and short-haired men as the century advanced stemmed from wartime experiences of the First World War (1914-1918). It was much easier for doughboys to keep free of lice that abounded in the trenches with clean-shaven faces and short hair. Thus, the practice prevailed in the post war.

All our presidents from Harding (1921-23) through Obama have been beardless and mustache-less. Wearing a mustache might have been a factor in Thomas Dewey’s losing the presidential election of 1948—an election that pundits had felt he couldn’t help but win. Apparently, many voters agree with Alice Roosevelt Longworth that his pencil-thin mustache made him look too much like “the man on the wedding cake.” Could Hitler’s sporting a not-very-glamorous mustache also have created a distaste for the style?

Although political figures abandoned facial hair, many debonair actors of the 20s and 30s wore trimmed mustaches. They include John Gilbert, Clark Gable, William Powell, Robert Taylor and Don Ameche.

My own father wore a mustache through the 20s and 30s, his reason being to conceal a scar above his lips sustained as a result of an accident while cranking his car.

Some mustaches of the early twentieth century could be quite glamorous and others quite bizarre. Among the styles were the “walrus,” the “handle bar,” the Van Dyke and the Fu Manchu. Many men took great care in coloring, curling and waxing their mustaches. However, this practice wasn’t compatible with coffee drinking. Consequently, some of the best known potters created mustache cups. This drinking cup, a valuable collectible in today’s antique market, was designed with a semi-circular ledge under the rim, allowing the passage of liquids, keeping the mustache dry, and not disturbing the coloring and curling effect.

Where was this school in Norwell?

This photo (taken circa 1950) was the Center School, which housed grades 1-3. A former student recalls the teacher heating up soup for lunch on the wood stove and remembers the outhouse in the back yard (although the school later got indoor plumbing).

Former president of the Norwell Historical Society Jeanne M. Garside passed away in Tuscon, Arizona on May 26, 2015 surrounded by her loving family. Among many other accomplishments, Jeanne was active in the Norwell Visiting Nurses Association as president and a member of the board for many years. She was active in developing a number of fund raising activities including the annual Haunted House Tour and Holly House tour. Jeanne and her husband, Bill, received the Norwell Citizen of the Year Award in 1995. Jeanne was also involved with the Norwell Historical Society in a number of roles over the years, including president from 1982-1988. Jeanne was also the author of The Way We Were, a history of Norwell in honor of the town’s centennial celebration.

Thank you to Jeanne for all she has given to the Town and to the Norwell Historical Society.

THE JACOBS' FAMILY HISTORY

by Bill Slattery

Editor's Note: The following is the first installment of a history of the Jacobs Family written by Society Archivist Bill Slattery for the Town of Norwell's application for the Jacobs Homestead property to be listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The application is still pending.

The first Jacob settler in America was named Nicholas. He may have been born in the Norfolk portion of East Anglia (England) in 1597. It is likely that the Jacob family was of, what we'd call "of the middle class." Nicholas, who married Mary Gilman in 1629 and had already two children with her by this time, decided to go to this new land in 1633. He traveled with his wife, son John, infant daughter Elizabeth, and a cousin named Thomas Lincoln, who was a weaver by trade and may have been the brother of an ancestor of President Lincoln who was named Samuel.

At first the Jacob family settled in Watertown, but soon moved to Hingham of Massachusetts Bay Colony. Nicholas was made a "freeman" or voting member of the colony by the standard used by Town authorities: one had to own some property, be a member of a Puritan congregation, be an adult male, and be deemed a person of sound moral character (that is, one of the "elect" of God for salvation). Nicholas served as a selectman for the Town of Hingham from 1637 to 1640, during the religious/political war in England between King Charles I and Parliament. As a selectman, he divided the Conohasset lands, now Cohasset, with eight other selectmen. However, some of these lands would eventually be granted to others. Nicholas also served during the years 1648 and 1649 in the Massachusetts Bay General Court (colonial legislature). He would die on June 5, 1657 at age 60, having fathered eight children, all but one surviving him.

Nicholas' son John, his first, was the only son to survive both parents and inherit the family's assets. He married Margery Eames on October 20, 1653 in Hingham, but she died after six years, leaving two sons and two daughters. In 1661, John married Mary Russell. She would live thirty years and give birth to 5 sons and 6 daughters, but she still did not outlive her husband.

John controlled much land on both sides of today's Main Street comprising much of the current Glad Tidings Plain Historic District in Hingham. While he worked as a surveyor, he was also a captain of militia, later called the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company. His eldest son, John, was killed by Indians on their land in King Philip's War (circa 1676). John Sr. constructed a lumber mill on Cushing Pond near Crooked Brook in 1692. There were competitors, among them Matthew Cushing's lumber mill on Triphammer Pond in 1670, now within Wampatuck State Park.

A signpost in Hingham, Norfolk, England—where Nicholas Jacob was born.
