A BIT OF THIS AND A BIT OF THAT

Since I misjudged the number of pages required to complete this issue, I am left with some space to spare. So, I am adding the following as an afterthought, and the surnames will not appear in the index.

In a note from Mary LYONS, she advised that Wilbert QUICK, 3138 So. 67th Court, Milwaukee, WI 53219 has an interesting booklet which he put together for the 50th anniversary of the Sandoval High School 1941 graduating class. It contains addresses and short descriptions of what each graduating member has been doing. Cost: $4.00.

Mary also sent along a note she had received from Rex WARDEN:

Since you have been working on cemeteries recently, I have to tell you about a most unusual one we visited last year in Liberal, MO. Instead of being laid out in horizontal rows, this one is in a circle with the plot in the center having been reserved for the man who planned the cemetery. All the bodies were buried with their feet toward the center so that on judgement day when they arose they would be facing the center of the place and toward the man who planned all this, and they would all ascend to heaven together. There was only one problem. The guy who planned it died before his wife and she buried him in another town. Oh well, even though his wife messed up his plans he did come up with a novel idea for a cemetery. At least I have never seen one like it anywhere else.

Speaking of cemeteries, the following item is from the February-March 1992 issue of Modern Maturity:

NO REST FOR THE DEAD - When Robert Prince, M.D., walks through 123-year-old Freedman's Cemetery in Dallas, he hears the whispers of his ancestors who repose in largely unmarked graves beneath his restless feet. For 26 years, the 61-year-old obstetrician/gynecologist has been on a crusade to preserve the acre and three-quarters that is left of the slave cemetery.

There is an urgency to Prince's mission. Part of the original four acres was lost over a century ago - in 1872 - through an eminent domain proceeding for the Houston & Texas Central Railroad. That portion is now underneath the adjacent North Central Expressway. Still more land was almost taken in 1985 for an expressway-widening project. What remains is now a park. A marble marker reads, "Freedmen's Memorial Park, A Public Cemetery 1861-1925, Donated to City of Dallas 1965."

"I have a strong feeling I am reincarnated from one who is buried there," says Prince. "That's what gives me my purpose." A family Bible confirms that four great-aunts and great-uncles were interred there.

When it looked like the cemetery would be overrun by the rubber tired wheels of progress, Prince brought out his big guns: He reminded officials of a Texas law against paving over or otherwise desecrating a cemetery. The project was delayed, and in May 1989 a team of archaeologists was directed to excavate the site to locate the 20 to 30 bodies they expected to find. By August 1991 they had turned up more than 1,200 graves.

Robert Prince wants the cemetery designated a historical site and a monument erected so that one day soon, he will be able to rest with the knowledge that the spirits of the Freedmen will finally be at ease.
