New Fresenius, Ohio Renal Care Group Opens State-of-the-Art Dialysis Center

by Thomas Jewell

Wrapping up its state licensure process, Ohio Renal Care Group's Cleveland Clinic East Dialysis Center is scheduled to take patients the first week of March.

A ribbon-cutting ceremony and open house were held January 4 at the new multi-million-dollar facility off Fairhill Road and Martin Luther King Jr. Drive, next to the Benjamin Rose Institute on Aging, which cleared the property and put it up for sale.

The ORCG partnership between the Clinic, the MetroHealth System and Fresenius gathered neighborhood support from Shaker Square Area Development Corp. (SHAD) and Larchmere Community Association in May 2015, especially as Benjamin Rose was turning away from Cleveland's east side, allowing up to 24 patients to stay overnight while their blood is treated at a slower rate under nurses' care.

What the community got was a two-story, 56-station dialysis center that features the first nocturnal treatment facility on Cleveland's east side, allowing up to 24 patients to stay overnight while their blood is treated at a slower rate under nurses' care.

For Hallie Bram Kogelschatz, a Cleveland native who met her Detroit-born husband while the two lived in Boston, said, "Doing work that we're proud of with clients that we genuinely enjoy working with."

"We are very proud to be a part of Shaker Square, an area with so much rich history." said Kogelschatz, who along with husband, Eric, have formed the business Shark&Minnow in 2013 as an innovation and action collaborative designed to bring people together and ignite positive change.

The couple, each of whom possess a Michigan State University graduate degree, said, "It was a natural progression that led to the start of a business within a physical site, in this case in the former Playmatters space, next to Fire restaurant. Plans call for an April opening."

"We are very intentional about making sure there is a good fit between our team and a client prior to entering into any relationship. We care deeply about our client's businesses or organizations and find ourselves always investing a bit more to ensure their success," said company CEO Kogelschatz, whose experience includes working with clients such as Cadillac, the Cleveland Clinic and Progressive.

"When the couple returned to Cleveland seven years ago, she said, "We found that very few firms here started from a place of insight and strategy. This was a major driver of our wanting to create something new in the marketplace." Eric Kogelschatz, who serves as the firm's chief strategy officer, is a Michigan State University graduate who has worked with clients such as the NFL Super Bowl, Ford Motors and American Greetings. The team also includes Director of Design Brian Andrew Jasinski.

On November 9, we all lost a lovely lady named Ann Geary Molyneaux. She led the Boulevard School PTO, and left a legacy and how she supported them along with her grandchild and her children and their parents. It’s with great sadness that SHAD announces the death of its former board member Doris Vargo who passed away in January.

treated at a slower rate under current care.

“They’re almost like hotel rooms, and they’re nice for patients who work during the day,” said Fresenius Regional Vice President Jamie Stans, noting that there are two nocturnal dialysis centers on the west side.

At the same time, the staff will be increasing from 60 to 75 employees when Fresenius, the world’s largest provider of dialysis services, moves its current operations, with only 44 stations, at the Cleveland Clinic’s Sleep Disorders Center across the street.

The new state-of-the-art facility will treat an anticipated 100 patients, up from the current 300 patients at the existing center, where over 3,000 dialysis treatments are performed each year.

“It’s a fairly open system, so community physicians with affiliations elsewhere want to refer patients to our center,” they said. Stans added. “It will give people better access to care.”
