AN UPSIDE-DOWN WORLD

By Steve Bakke  April 6, 2019

A Houston, Texas Public Library allowed a registered child sex offender to participate in its “drag queen reading program” for children. This created a lot of push-back and the program was terminated. What represents the worst judgement here? Was it the lack of background checks, or starting this controversial program in the first place?

An Arlington, Virginia elementary school had kindergartners sit on the floor to hear a transgender woman read them a storybook. Parents were given general notification without specifics, and were not offered an “opt out.” These students were told that a child may have a girl brain and a boy body, or a boy brain and a girl body. In fact, that’s what the book claims. These were kindergarten students.

In Santa Ana, California, moms and dads first learned from their students that a “LGBT Fair” was held in their middle school. Parents were not asked to give permission for their child to attend. One student reported that people in drag were giving makeup lessons in the school.

These examples seem even more incredible when one thinks about all the innocent activities that aren’t permitted in schools. We live in an upside-down world.
