On behalf of the editorial team I would like to introduce the first volume of the Journal of Social Science & Allied Health Professions. Whilst an embryonic idea in January 2016, on-going collaborations and support with the Advisory Editor Professor David Muller, the Editorial Board and Managing Editors have enabled the creation of a free, online and open access journal. The aim of publishing original research without the need of payment (from readers or authors) remains a central tenet of this journal for the future.

I would like to thank Professor David Muller for his continued support and regular meetings throughout the development of this journal. His knowledge and understanding as a scholar and experience as the Editor-in-Chief of the Disability and Rehabilitation Journal remains invaluable and I look forward to working with him in the future.

I would like to welcome and introduce the Editorial Board, Professor Mohammed Dasbaz, Professor Penny Cavenagh, Professor Shane Blackman and Dr. Euclid Seeram. The Editorial Board currently consists of academics with national and international recognition, whilst believing in its underpinning vision. It is hoped the team will continue to expand, welcoming academics from other parts of the world. This first volume is testament to the reviewers who have unselfishly offered their time and expertise to review submitted manuscripts.

Lastly, as a team it is always constructive to receive feedback. If you have any feedback or comments regarding the journal I will be pleased to hear your views.
