Rumors about his dragon riding story spread quickly all over the country and Linh was soon worshipped by the whole population. They considered him as the son of God coming down to earth to save their country then in danger of civil war. Availing himself of this opportunity, Linh raised the standard of revolt and become one among the twelve feudal Lords ruling over the country then divided into twelve autonomous regions. After twenty year of struggle Dinh Bo Linh managed to defeat the other eleven and proclaimed himself Emperor in 968 under the name of Dai Co Viet, and established his capital at Hoa Lu, his native village.

The little girl one day ran to her mother in great concern, «Muvve muvver! » she cried in anxious tones, «how soon is it my birthday?» «It will soon be here, dear,» replied mother. «No, no,» objected the child impatient «I mean is it time yet for me to begin being a good girl?»

A drama critic who was known chiefly for two things, his biting criticism and his indigestion, had foolishly put away a big dinner before going to the opening of a new show. His gastric discomfort was not made any easier by the poor quality of the show, and finally he emitted a very clear and distinct burp. A girl in an adjoining seat turned on him reprovingly to whisper «Can't you wait until later to give your review?»

The girl looked maliciously after a charming young belle tripping down the street. «There's a girl who's willing to suffer for her beliefs,» she observed caustically to her boy-friend. «Why, what belief is that?» he asked innocently. «Oh, she believes that she can wear a number five shoe on a number eleven foot,» was the biting reply.

Little Jane had been a «bad girl» and mother had sent her to her room to consider things. After a while she reappeared with a bright and shining face. «Well, mamma,» she announced, «I've thought things over and I pray for help.» «That's fine,» approved mother. «That should help you to be a good girl.» «I didn't pray for help to be good,» explained the girl. «I asked God to help you put up with me.»

Gay Funeral Follows In Wake Of Sad One

LAGOS, Nigeria (UPI).— In the eastern region of Nigeria the Ibo tribesmen have a unique system of dipping sorrow when a man dies.

They hold two funerals — a sad one and a happy one.

The first ceremony is the burial of the corpse and it is marked by a period of mourning. Then comes the second funeral, called a «farewell» to the departed spirit. This is a gay affair at which the deceased is wished good fortune on his journey to the other world.

At the burial, normally only blood relatives and wives attend. But the «farewell» funeral is attended not only by blood relatives but relatives by marriage — except widows — and friends of the departed one.

The «farewell» wake is a feast for which food is prepared in huge quantities, washed down by equally huge quantities of palm wine, the national drink which is tapped from palm trees.

According to tradition, if the deceased is a brave man or one descended from a warrior, a ram is slaughtered in the middle of the village compound, the blood spilled on a «tree of sacrifice». The animal is then cooked in a special way and served to all members of the family of the same age as the deceased.

On the first day of the second ceremony, the eldest daughters — called the «adas» of the family — gather in the house of the Number One wife and keep vigil throughout the night, singing and dancing. By early morning of the second day they dance in a procession around the village singing songs of appeasement to the spirit of the dead and requesting it to carry the departed safely to happiness and prosperity in the next world.

Meanwhile the man also celebrates on their own, by firing guns. The higher the status of the deceased the noisier the ceremonies. Gunfire is supposed to alert the spirit of the dead and make it aware of the celebration on earth but it also is intended to scare away any wicked spirit which might be trying to take possession of the deceased's soul.

In some parts of Ibo-land, a basket-work effigy is made exactly the same size as the dead man and wrapped in a mat, which in turn is covered with a white cloth. In some parts this mummy is buried, but in other areas it is thrown into the «bush» or left in the bedroom of the deceased to gather dust with other images in a sort of shrine.

There are various traditional observances connected with these funerals. Women of the deceased's household, particularly his widows — the Ibo still practice polygamy — are required to remain in the compound while mourning is in progress. They sit with heads bowed until the farewell ceremonies are completed. Their heads are completely shaved and blackened with indigo.

The farewell funeral ceremonies are very expensive, but even in these modern times they are performed as a matter of prestige. Even Christian tribesmen observe the tradition, but have modernized the rites with a memorial service and buffet lunch — frequently brightened by a brass band.

MOVIES

The Dai Nam, Eden, Majestic, Kinh Lo, Khai Hoan and Rex, are first class air conditioned theatres in the heart of Saigon where first-run films are shown. There are a great many second class air-conditioned theaters, all over the city. Movie theaters, or cinemas, as they are commonly called here, usually start at 1:00 in the afternoon. On holidays show-begins at 9:00 in the morning. Last screening starts at about 9:00 in the evening. Hollywood, British, French, Japanese and Vietnamese films are shown in popular theaters. Most of the films have French sound tracks with Vietnamese subtitles.

The «Hat Boi» is essentially tragic and is always steeped in the great dramas of the history of China. The actors richly dressed, have to limit themselves to a certain number of exacting rules and symbols. Their make-up itself is also conventional.

THEATERS

There are two types of Vietnamese dramatic art: the «Hat Boi» or classical theater, and the «Cai Luong» or modern theater.

The «Cai Luong» which combines tragedy and comedy was born in South Viet Nam about 1920. A music composer is required for the setting up of a scene, as he wants to grace the ears with his music, as well as to please the eyes with his settings and costumes.

A good «Cai Luong» play reminds one of the film techniques and the male and female stars often are the objects of a true adoration.

Following are some big theater houses where well-known troupes often hold their performances.

SAIGON

Saigon, the charming political and cultural capital of the Republic of Viet Nam, is one of the most attractive cities in the Orient characterized by a combination of French and Oriental cultures and tastes. If this « Pearl of the East », as it has been called by sea merchants from the Occident, is now growing and moving forward, it still retains the freshness of a French capital, which exudes from the sidewalk cafes.

Visitors to this enchanting city are always charmed by the friendliness and gaiety of the Vietnamese people, the loveliness of pretty girls, the delicious and almost overabundant food, the fairytale atmosphere of the surrounding countryside; and bewildered by the masses of bicycles and scooter which are the main cause of traffic jams? Saigon is also called the « city on the wheels » because of its approximately 500,000 bicycles. They are ridden to work by businessmen, peddled to school by students and carry all sorts of delivery boys and messengers on their errands.

A common — and always eye-catching sight — is a Velo-Solex cruising along with two attractive girls wearing colorful traditional dresses, the skirts of which flutter in the wind and threatened to catch in the whirling mechanism a any moment.

Le Loi boulevard and Tu Do Streets, Saigon's main thoroughfares, mirror easy-going manners of the Vietnamese. Siesta is as much a ritual here as elsewhere in Asia; shops close down until half past two in the afternoon when the streets again throb with commerce. By eight in the evening all the shops are closed and the night life begins with night strollers prowling the floodlit streets.

Saigon's history dates back only to 200 years when it was once just a cluster of thatched huts of fishermen. Now this city of nearly two million people and covering about 51 square kilometers, is the center of Viet Nam cultural life, as well as the hub of its industry and commerce.

CHINATOWN OF CHOLON

Saigon's twin city, Cholon, is an authentic Chinese town with its characteristic bustling. If Saigon shines with an old world graciousness, the overgrown Chinatown of Cholon has the hurly-burly of a young city.

Formerly the two cities were administered separately, but in 1956, they were merged by presidential decree.

Cholon must be visited at night to see the crowd overflowing the streets and the multitude of dazzling neon signs. Here the gourmet finds excellent Chinese and French cuisine, while he dines to the music of gracious and heavily made-up singers, lovely waitresses serve him to enhance the prestige of the Chinese culinary art.

THE BOTANICAL GARDENS

Facing the Dinh Doc Lap (Independence Palace) at the East end of the Thong Nhat boulevard, the Botanical Gardens present a particular interest. They possess one of the most important collections of orchids and of equatorial plants, besides a wide variety of game.

OUR LADY'S BASILICA

Located in the centre of the Hoa Binh place, in front of the General Post Office building, Our Lady's Basilica, of roman style, with its two 40 meter high steeples, dominates the city. It was built with red bricks, on a foundation of granite, and achieved in 1883.

MARSHAL LE VAN DUYET'S TOMB

The tomb of Marshal Le Van Duyet, a military hero who served Emperor Gia Long, the unifier of Viet Nam in the 19th century, is situated in the old Khmer capital now called Gia Dinh (a separate city with its own administration) but practically speaking a suburb of Saigon). Destroyed by King Minh Mang in 1831, the tomb was rebuilt by his successor King Thieu Tri. Now each year on the occasion of the Vietnamese Tet and on his anniversary day, the place is thronged with pilgrims coming from all parts of the country.

Further on, is the Tomb of the Bishop of Adran which holds an inscription recalling the friendship between the French prelate and the Emperor Gia Long, is also worth to be visited.

OTHER TOURIST RESORTS

From Saigon tourists may go by car to Bien Hoa, a pottery center, to visit the School of Applied Art, to Binh Duong, where excellent lacquer pieces are produced, or to Tay Ninh to see the magnificent Cao Dai Chapel. Tourists may also go by car to Vung Tau, or to Long Hai and Nuoc Ngot, for their white beaches.

BIEN HOA

A pretty little town 32 km East of Saigon lies on the bank of the river of Dong Nai. In Buu Son temple at Bien Hoa you can see the 15th century granite statue of Cham origin which was hidden for several centuries inside a tree trunk. Tourists can also pay a visit to the school of Pottery and Bronze Art, where the traditional skill of the Vietnamese artist is added to the impetus of modern technique.

TRI AN WATERFALLS.

On the same Dong Nai river, 68kms from Saigon, are the Tri An waterfalls. In the dry season the falls are 8 meter high and 30 meter wide. In the rainy season they spread across the whole ridge and the volume of water is 100,000 cubic meters a minute.
