The Sources of Morality

The morality of human acts depends on:

- The object chosen;
- The end in view or the intention;
- The circumstances of the action.

The object, the intention, and the circumstances make up the “sources,” or constitutive elements, of the morality of human acts.

The object chosen is a good toward which the will deliberately directs itself. It is the matter of a human act. The object chosen morally specifies that act of the will, insofar as reason recognizes and judges it to be or not be in conformity with the true good. Objective norms of morality express the rational order of good and evil, attested to by conscience.

In contrast to the object, the intention resides in the acting subject. Because it lies at the voluntary source of an action and determines it by its end, intention is an element essential to the moral evaluation of an action. The end is the first goal of the intention and indicates the purpose pursued in the action. The intention is a movement of the will toward the end: it is concerned with the goal of the activity. It aims at the good anticipated from the action undertaken. Intention is not limited to directing individual actions, but can guide several actions toward one and the same purpose; it can orient one’s whole life toward its ultimate end. For example, a service done with the end of helping one’s neighbor can at the same time be inspired by the love of God as the ultimate end of all our actions. One and the same action can also be inspired by several intentions, such as performing a service in order to obtain a favor or to boast about it. (to be continued)

SAINT LAWRENCE

Feast Day August 10

St. Lawrence is highly venerated by the Church. This is demonstrated by the fact that his church in Rome is among the five most important. Despite the fact that much of what we know of him is apocryphal one small story of his life is most delightful to consider. When the Prefect of Rome challenged him to bring him the treasures of the church for Caesar. St. Lawrence replied that the Church was indeed rich. “I will show you the most valuable part. But give me time to set everything in order and make an inventory.” After three days he gathered a great number of blind, lame, maimed, leprous, orphaned, and widowed persons and put them in rows. When the prefect arrived, Lawrence simply said, “These are the treasures of the Church.” His reply earned him martyrdom and he became a part of the church’s treasure himself!
