BARREL RACING TIP

Hip control is very important on a barrel horse. It's real important to be able to feel when they are stepping out with their hindquarters just before the barrel as well as on the approach to the barrel. Normally, if you get the hip where it needs to be the rest of it is easy to fix. However, sometimes you may want to make sure your horse is physically ok before "tuning" on your horse. If you "tune" on them and they are making mistakes because of a physical issue, you will only make the problem worse and possibly upset the horse to the point where it will be even harder to fix later (horses will relate physical pain to the barrels).

Hip control is how you would teach your horse to two-track. Your horse should be able to two-track on a walk, trot and a collected lope away from the barrels. They should completely understand this and move off of your leg easily while staying light in your hand. Your horse will need to use its inside hindquarter driving leg when turning a barrel. If their hip is out too far, their driving leg (the power) will not be in the proper position to turn or have the power they need to come off of the turns hard and fast.

The better your horse is broke and knows these maneuvers the easier it is to teach them the barrel pattern as you are merely adding an object (a barrel).
