Tutankhamun: A Century of Discovery and Forensic Examination
In November 2022, we celebrated the centenary of the discovery of Tutankhamun's 18th dynasty tomb.

Howard Carter and his team unearthed a treasure trove, the likes of which the world had never seen.

Due to the sheer volume of artefacts and the meticulous documentation efforts by Carter, the autopsy of Tutankhamun was not conducted until 1925.

Over the years, Tutankhamun's mummy has been examined on three additional occasions.

What did the initial autopsy reveal?

What insights have recent CT studies provided regarding Tutankhamun's health, cause of death, and mummification techniques?

Sofia Aziz is a Biomedical Egyptologist with a lifelong passion for ancient Egypt.

Her focus has been on understanding the health of Ancient Egyptians and the diseases they suffered from.

She has contributed to numerous publications, served as a media consultant, participated in podcasts, and appeared in various TV documentaries.

Her current research re-evaluates ancient Egyptian mummification techniques and explores the knowledge Egyptian physicians had of the human brain.

This Lecture can also be viewed live on ZOOM
