A Potsdam "Fun Band" of the past playing your favorite tunes since 1971. "We don't really have to do this anymore," said original member and current drummer Alex Vangellow. "We choose to do it."
"The biggest reason we still do it is because people still have a good time when we play," he said.

"If that didn't happen, it wouldn't be worth it," said another of the original band members, Rob Zolner, who mainly plays keyboards and guitar these days.

Bassist Frank Johns, also a Double Axle member for all 40 years, is a retired teacher now, but he recalls one of the main reasons he has stuck with it so long.

"There was this thing I realized when I was teaching. When the weekends came, and we were playing Friday or Saturday or both, the gigs would recharge my batteries and I could go back to school on Monday ready to go." And he still gets a charge out of it all.

Those three – Vangellow, Zolner and Johns -- formed the core of Double Axle from the beginning, and they make the band a "power trio" today.
