Bell Schools

Bell Schools

These were founded by Dr Andrew Bell who used the monitorial system, which was known as the Madras system, after his time in India where he saw older children reaching others the alphabet. Under this system only one teacher was needed as the older children taught the younger ones. The Bell Schools were committed to the Church of England.

British and Foreign School Society

Founded by Joseph Lancaster in 1798 using a variant of the monitorial system which he developed simultaneously with Dr Andrew Bell. Unlike Bell his schools had no commitment to the church. He fell out with the society over the issue of corporal punishment and the society renamed itself The British and Foreign School Society. The schools were later handed over to the new school boards.
