Our St Paul's - Knights of Columbus Roundtable – is helping to Restore Her Floors

Our Knights will be collecting NEXT Weekend after both masses if you would like to make a donation.

Construction of The Cathedral of the Madeleine was begun in the year 1900 and completed in 1909. The exterior of the cathedral remains substantially the same today as it was in 1909 and is listed on the Utah and the National Register of Historic Sites.

After the Cathedral of the Madeleine was restored in the 1990s, the cathedral's floor shone like it did back when it was first installed in 1909. But time, wax and dirt have dulled the finish to the color of strong coffee. To return the floor to its natural maple color, Jeremy Librett's team from Babylon by Brush, have spent the last year stripping away the grime; the project is anticipated to take at least another year as the work is done section by section.

During the 1990s restoration, the cathedral was closed for two years while the interior was gutted and the entire floor was sanded. This time the decision was made to not close the doors while the work was being done. Sanding the floor also was deemed unwise because of the cost and also because the sawdust would damage the cathedral's historic Kenneth Jones organ.

"There's something incredibly special about the Cathedral of the Madeleine," Librett added. "It's a work of art. Like I tell my workers, 'This is going to be here forever, so do it really well. They're not going to tear this thing down in 30 years; this could be here for 1,000 years so this is our chance right now to contribute to the next 1,000 years.'"

"The other reason I do it is I wanted to make that cathedral brighter," he said. "My personal goal was to be able to see the stained-glass windows reflected in the floor" – a goal he has seen realized.

The initial estimate to restore the cathedral floor was $100,000, which was covered by a grant. However, it now appears that it could cost as much as an additional $200,000 to complete the project. To cover the overrun, the cathedral has launched a fundraising campaign. A very generous Angel supporter has offered to triple the amount of their goal. When $25,000 is raised, it will be tripled with a gift of $75,000! Please give what you can and become a part of this legacy.
