Hemlock: Healing, cleansing, strength and perseverance. There is a lot of confusion about this one. This reference is for the Hemlock Tree: a type of Pine. (Tsuga) In the Pacific Northwest there are two that are common: the Mountain Hemlock (Tsuga mertensiana) and the Western Hemlock (Tsuga heterophylla). Neither of which are poisonous, a dubious reputation that belongs to a noxious weed of the same name, Poison Hemlock (Conium maculatum) which is deadly. Do not confuse the two. Deadly Hemlock (Conium maculatum) also called water hemlock and poisoned hemlock is a plant that is so toxic just touching it can lead to poisoning and ingesting it is certain death. When ingested, the fast-acting toxin paralyzes you until your respiratory system fails. Deadly Hemlock looks just like Queen Anne's Lace (Daucus carota) also known as Wild Carrot is a common wildflower in fact they look so much alike even expert wildcrafters get them confused. A few years ago a seasoned wildcrafter I knew died after she misidentifying wild carrot. So do not mess with this plant. The Hemlock tree has warming qualities. The inner bark is high in tannin and can be made into a poultice to treat sores, burns, and wounds. A tea made from the needles will stop minor bleeding, treat hemorrhoids, and control diarrhea but the tannin content is very high and regular consumption should be avoided. Use a wand made of Hemlock to aid in magical transformations. Add the small cones to mojo bags to add to protective quality or to promote strength and honor. Grind into an incense and burn to cleanse a space.
