ASHRAE Denver Highlights - Latest in Building Energy Benchmarking (including ASHRAE bEQ) and Strategies for building owners and designers can use to improve measured energy performance over the lifetime of the building.

In our Sept Meeting, the topic of Building Energy Disclosure will come up - because it was highlighted at the ASHRAE Denver Meeting. Here is another city pushing in this direction.

Chicago Wants Large Buildings to Disclose Energy Use

CHICAGO-Owners of large buildings in Chicago would be required to publicly disclose how much energy their buildings use and how they measure up against their peers under a proposed city ordinance. Under the proposal, buildings larger than 50,000 ft² (4600 m²)-which represent less than 1% of the city's building stock but account for 22% of the energy used-would be required to input energy consumption data and information about building size, use and occupancy levels into the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Portfolio Manager benchmarking tool. The software would then compare the energy efficiency of comparable buildings. The goal is to reduce energy use in half of Chicago buildings by 30% by 2020.
