Swedish massage therapy relaxes the entire body, increasing the level of oxygen in the blood, decreasing muscle toxins, improving circulation and flexibility while easing tension by rubbing the muscles with long gliding strokes in the direction of blood returning to the heart.

Patricia Bijman is a Certified International Lymphedema and Wound Care Therapist, and a Hellerwork Structural Integration Practitioner.

She is currently enrolled in a 2200-hour Registered Massage Therapist program at the Albert College of Massage Therapy, and will be graduating in 2018.
