

Seminar: Respect Affect

“It doesn't matter if you're working in the mail room or you're the CEO of the company; EVERYONE wants to be treated with respect.”

Tamara L. Napier, MBA
Universal Adventures

Like you, national business consultant Kristine McCardle works with people from every walk of life. Your company's greatest assets are your employees; diverse employees. When different personalities come together, differences come out. What often results is conflict; and conflict negatively impacts your company's productivity.

With over fifteen years of executive coaching, training, and most importantly, real-life in-the-trenches business experience, her approach is radically different.

Kristine, sometimes referred to as the “Provocateur” for her ability to stir up a group brings out the best in people. She's known for her high energy, entertaining style.

Kristine's fusion of real-life stories and her conversational techniques connect with her audience at an engaging and individual level.

Respect Affect Training Seminar:

Staff members that show a lack of respect for each other create breaks in company communication. Employees that do not respect each other spend too much time strategizing against one another. Does your company suffer from lack of morale, excessive gossip, out of control rumor mill? If so, you're exposed to lost revenue, work comp claims, delayed work product, and over-all the morale of the company is affected.

In order to increase productivity, reduce absenteeism, and create a more enjoyable workplace employers must shape and influence a culture of respect. This seminar will do exactly that.

This engaging 2 hour interactive seminar teaches awareness of our differences; differences in the way we work, think, communicate, and live. It also teaches the danger of silence when we don't mention an issue. We'll dive into the diversity of religion, race, national origin, sexual orientation, and addresses bullying issues. If there's a difference, we address it.
