POLL: ONE-THIRD OF DEMOCRATS THINK CRITICIZING PERSONS OF COLOR IS RACISM

By Steve Bakke  July 23, 2019

Members of “The Squad” recently compared immigrant border facilities to Nazi concentration camps, bemoaned that Congress is controlled by Jewish money, described “a calming feeling” when thinking about the Holocaust, and stated, “We don’t need black faces that don’t want to be a black voice.” I could go on.

The Squad was “shouting” back and forth with President Trump while getting into bit of a tiff with Nancy Pelosi. House Speaker Pelosi tried to reign them in, and the President called them racists and suggested they practice their problem-solving techniques back where they all came from. The Squad accused the President of being a racist, and also told Speaker Pelosi: “Acknowledge the fact that we are women of color, so when you do single us out, be aware of that and what you’re doing.....” The comment to Pelosi demonstrates their expectation of special treatment. Are they alone with that opinion?

Apparently not. A recent Rasmussen poll tells us that one-in-three Democrats believe criticizing a person of color, in this case a politician, is automatically racism. Sadly, identity politics and extreme political correctness intends that we accept statements and actions by certain individuals without disagreement.
