A Note from Rick: Markets on Tuesday were unchanged for the most part with the exception of bull calves. Bull calves fell off of last week's pace, which was a strong one. I think last week was just a little too wild. Two other markets that stuck out to me on Tuesday were the butcher cows, which continued to show strength and the dairy market, which has been on a major slide the last couple of months. I'm seeing and hearing an end to the slide. Although prices aren't very good, at least maybe we've hit the bottom. The bottom means there's nowhere to go but up. With stronger bull calf prices, stronger butcher cow prices and better milk futures on the Board of Trade, hopefully we can turn the corner on replacement heifers. However, we can't get too excited. I don't think it's going to go up fast or quick. The Pony Sale on Memorial Day was a big one. We had lots of people and lots of ponies. It's a fun day because of all of the kids. It's pretty cool to hand out buyer numbers to the young ones and then see the excitement on their faces when they come to pay the bill and pick up their checks. They put a lot of time in getting the ponies ready to sell and sale day can't come soon enough. It was one of our daughter's birthday on Monday so I had to take home a couple too. Now I'm putting in a lot of time driving ponies! If you missed this one, we've got another one June 16th. See you at TLA!
