THE TRIANGLE OF SELF-OBSSESSION

When we are born we are conscious only of ourselves, we are the universe. We perceive little other than our basic needs, and if these needs are met we are content. As our consciousness expands we become aware of a world outside ourselves. We discover that there are people, places, and things around us, and that they fulfill our needs. At this point we also begin to recognize differences and develop preferences. We learn to want and choose. We are the center of a growing universe and expect to be provided with the things we need and want. Our source of contentment shifts from basic needs miraculously met to the fulfillment of our desires.

Most children, through experiences over a period of time, come to realize that the outside world cannot provide all their wants and needs. They begin to supplement what is given to them with their own efforts. As their dependency on people, places, and things decreases they begin to look to themselves more and more. They become more self-sufficient and learn that happiness and contentment come from within. Most continue to mature; they recognize and accept their strengths, weaknesses, and limitations. At some point, they usually seek the help of a power greater than themselves to provide the things they cannot provide for themselves. For most people, growing up is a natural process.

As addicts, however, we seem to falter along the way. We never seem to outgrow the self-centeredness of the child. We never seem to find the self-sufficiency that others do. We continue to depend on the world around us and refuse to accept that we will not be given everything. We become self-obsessed; our wants and needs become demands. We reach a point where contentment and fulfillment are impossible. People, places, and things cannot possibly fill the emptiness inside of us, and we react to them with resentment, anger, and fear.

Resentment, anger and fear make up the Triangle of Self-Obsession. All of our defects of character are forms of these three reactions. Self-obsession is at the heart of our insanity.
The way we relate to people, places and things:

- Fear is replaced with faith.
- Anger is replaced with acceptance.
- Resentment is replaced with love.
- Addiction and from our self-obsession.

We have a disease that in the end, forces us to seek help. We must break the Triangle of Self-Obsession.

We must grow up, or die. One last chance. We are fortunate that we are given only one choice.

In Narcotics Anonymous, we are given a new way of life and a new set of tools. These are the Twelve Steps, and we work them to the best of our ability. If we stay clean and stay sober, a miracle happens. We find freedom— from drugs, from our past—and a new way of life, a new way of relating to our demands.
