

Testimonial

Friday, January 04, 2013

Jeff and his team have done two separate projects for my home over the last couple of years, and I have been so happy with his work that I am pleased to write this testimonial.

My first experience with his work was when I was doing a complete renovation on the upstairs of my 100-year-old house. I was stripping the walls down to the studs and knew that now was the time to do the insulation properly. Because of the way the dormers were constructed, traditional fiberglass batting would have been totally insufficient. I had read about spray-foam insulation and wanted the extra insulating power it provided, but knew it was more expensive. My budget was very limited, but I knew I would be sorry if I cut corners on this step.

Jeff came in and gave what I thought was a very reasonable price, but what I got for that was far more than I expected. Spray foam tends to be a messy process, but the crew was very careful to mask off the area and clean up after their work. The crew was respectful of my home and did a terrific job. The result was an upstairs that was not only well-insulated, it was water-tight, air-tight, and quiet! That part of the house was now the most comfortable and pleasant in the winter months.

My next project was to insulate the floors on the first level of the house. The flooding from Superstorm Sandy hurried the project along since it required that all the soaked batt insulation be removed and replaced. Rather than replacing it with more batting, (which had proved ineffective in keeping us warm), I called Jeff again.

To my delight, Jeff's price was actually in the same range as installing fiberglass batting, and I scheduled the work as soon as he could fit me in. The job was done in half a day, and I could feel the difference immediately. Previously, my tile floors had been icy all winter long – we wouldn't go into the kitchen without shoes on if we could avoid it. When Jeff knocked to tell me they had finished, I had to walk across a tile floor to answer the door, and despite the cold windy weather outside, my floor was warm!

I am exceedingly pleased with this company, and wouldn't hesitate to recommend it to anyone. The product itself is excellent, and Jeff and his crew are highly skilled and true professionals, and they're nice guys to boot! I guarantee you won't be disappointed.
