Gospel: Mark 5: 2-43

“Two Encounters”

*****

As Mark presents us with a "story-within-a-story." First, there is an encounter between Jesus and a man named Jairus. Jairus' agenda is simple and very urgent: his little daughter seems to be at the point of death, and he feels utterly powerless. He has nothing to lose, yet his request is by no means hopeless or despairing. He simply requests: "Come and lay your hands on her, so that she may be made well, and live."

He is a person of faith; and faith, as we are told over and over in the Gospels, makes miracles.

The second, encounter takes place between Jesus and a nameless woman, runs its course, interrupting the first. "There was a woman," the Gospel tells us. She too confronts Jesus, but not in the same way that Jairus did. She was simply there. She was a woman - and therefore socially insignificant; but she is there, and therefore physically unavoidable. She, too, is a person of faith and believes that if she simply touches Jesus' clothes, then she would be well. Her faith alone is enough to drive her into action.

Faith without action is pointless. All we have to do is to be attentive to life around us, to visit the sick, to feed the hungry, to give drink to the thirsty, to care for the homeless and the oppressed. Because so long as we are close to the very least and discarded of this world, will we begin to understand that Jesus has come to involve everyone in his work of proclaiming that the reign of God has come.
