

Absolute Truth is Relative to Nothing. As nothing is, One can see that the mission in understanding supports the fact that all matter possess inherent emptiness. In order to see this, one has to understand that the cup is always empty, yet full of Aether. This allows us to just to see that the cup has a form in solids, Aether, see that the cup is in fact full, yet in retrospect, it is empty. It is liquid and each of these fulfill a promise of how each cup fills itself. Each cup allows itself to be full within permeance and the luminous presence radiates from the covenant in which that is.

Absolute is a Perfect Unity of all that which is and that which is not. It is the current that underlies the river of Maya. It supports its illusion through Truth and unTruth, delivering the awareness in Tao to those who have cleared the cloud from the mind. Unity, connection, perfection, all these things support a harmony with Reality that balances itself to the perfect medium in the middle. The sides are radical. Each side is either a spectrum of the adjacent, or it is a mirror in which that is and that can be. To the left, that which is not, to the right that which is, in the middle, that as it is. We can see that through the underlying premise of Truth, the collective fact of Reality interweaves itself through the underlying substance that creates life. This collective Tao resembles a flowing example to those who preach the mind. Yet Mind is what some preach, and as each of these support a fractal of Reality, it shows us that the middle is in fact, the perfect unity of both sides.