

January 12, 2016

To Whom It May Concern –

I am writing this letter on behalf of Brian “Jeremy” Lowe. I only had the pleasure of knowing Jeremy for approximately eight months, but I must say that in my vast work history I don’t recall meeting a finer gentleman. To put that in perspective, my travels include the United States Air Force, Ford Motor Company, Brown Forman, and now Jewelry in Candles.

We often joked with each other about his upbringing in the country, but in all honesty, it was no joke but an honor to work with someone who possesses competencies, such as, integrity, strong work ethic, a team player, and results-oriented, etc. Who wouldn’t want someone on their team that possesses these type of characteristic behaviors? I ask that you afford Jeremy any opportunity you might have open in your organization that matches his qualifications. If your decision came down to Jeremy or another candidate I would ask that you reflect on the saying,

“Opportunities are often missed because they are dressed in coveralls and look like work” ~ Thomas Edison

One observation you will quickly learn about Jeremy, if hired, is he is the first to arrive and the last to leave. He is the ultimate team player, whereas in the game of football he might play the unsung position of lineman. He is willing to get in the trenches to get the job done, and once the work day is over his mindset will be - “Did we win”? Not who gets the credit!

I do not know what your current team’s needs, however, I am confident that Jeremy is the answer!

With kind regards,

A handwritten signature in cursive script that reads "Darryl Spaulding".

Darryl Spaulding, Chief Operating Officer w/Jewelry in Candles