Turchin, who had once been a soldier in the Russian Czar's army. He served, for the most part, with honor in the Union Army, however, he seems to have made his own rules whenever it suited him to do so. His wife, who followed him from battle to battle, is buried next to him. I believe in the post-war years they lived out their lives in Washington County, next door to Marion County.

There is a series of bronze markers, each carrying a stanza of Major Theodore O'Hara's poem, "The Bivouac of the Dead." These markers are spaced in sequence along the road- and walk-ways. The first one, just inside the entrance, carries the opening lines - "The muffled drum has beat the soldier's last tattoo...."

So, the writer of the quoted article is correct. A lot of history can be gleaned from old cemeteries if one takes the time to read the stones.
