Chapter 75 -- A Troubling House Vote Hands The Presidency To JQ Adams

*************************************

Time: Winter 1824

The General Election Ends Without A Winner

Voting in 1824 takes place between October 26 and December 2. Turnout surpasses all prior contests, as three in every four states now choose electors based on the popular votes, and real competition draws public interest.

As expected, none of the four candidates reach the 131 electoral vote level needed to become president in the traditional fashion. Andrew Jackson comes closest, at 99 votes, with Adams a close second. Crawford edges Clay for third place, even though he remains physically incapable of serving.

Results Of The 1824 Presidential Election

| Candidates | State | Party | Pop Vote | Tot EV |
| :--- | :--- | :--- | :---: | :---: |
| Andrew Jackson | Tn | Dem-Rep | 151,271 | 99 |
| John Quincy Adams | MA | Dem-Rep | 113,122 | 84 |
| William Crawford | Ga | Dem-Rep | 40,856 | 41 |
| Henry Clay | Ky | Dem-Rep | 47,531 | 37 |

|  |  |  |  |  |
| Total |  |  | 365,833 | 261 |
| Needed to win |  |  |  | 131 |

Jackson alone demonstrates national appeal, garnering significant votes in all four regions of the country. Adams support is almost exclusively in the northeast. Crawford splits the old South with Jackson, and Clay wins his home state of Kentucky and its northern neighbor, Ohio.

Clay Maneuvers To Insure That The House Elects Adams

According to the $12^{\text {th }}$ Amendment rules, the choice of president now falls into the House of Representatives, which meets on February 9, 1825, to decide the outcome. Each state will cast one vote for the winner within their caucus. Since there are 24 states in total, a candidate must take at least 13 to be elected.

In the general election, Jackson has led the pack, winning 12 states, with Adams as runner-up.

States Won In General Election

| Candidates | $#$ |
| :--- | :---: |
| Andrew Jackson | 12 |
| John Quincy Adams | 7 |
| Henry Clay | 3 |
| William Crawford | 2 |

Jackson’s lead, however, quickly slips away in the House. He loses Delaware and North Carolina to Crawford, and then Louisiana to Adams. At the last moment, New York also slips away, after Daniel Webster and Henry Clay convince the Dutch patron, Stephen Van Rensselaer, to break his promise to Van Buren, and cast a deciding vote in the caucus for Adams.

The rest of Jackson's losses also trace directly to the Speaker. From the beginning, Clay dismisses Jackson's readiness to be president in no uncertain terms:

I cannot believe that killing 2500 Englishmen at N. Orleans qualifies for the various, difficult and complicated duties of the Chief Magistry.

He is joined in this conclusion by Jefferson and others who regard the General's temperament as too rash for the office, as demonstrated by his recent rampages in Florida.

But Clay now must choose between Adams and Crawford, and he meets with the former before the House vote. Two very different views of this meeting emerge in hindsight. One is that Adams convinces Clay that he will support the Speaker's "American System" initiatives if elected. The other is that Adam's secures Clays' support by promising to name him Secretary of State.

Whatever the reason, Clay decides to steer three key states he won in the general - Kentucky, Missouri and Ohio - over to Adam's column on the first ballot. This give him the thirteen states needed for victory.

The Jackson Vs. Clay Division Destroys The "Unity Party" Posture Of The DemocraticRepublicans

Even though Jackson secures only seven states in the runoff to Adam's thirteen, he never forgives Henry Clay for costing him the presidency in 1824. When word leaks out that Adams indeed intends to nominate Clay for State, Jackson vents his spleen:

Clay voted for Adams and made him President and Adams made Clay Secretary of State. Is this not proof as strong as holy writ of the understanding and corrupt coalition between them? So, the Judas of the West has closed the contract and will receive the thirty pieces of silver. His end will be the same. Was there ever witnessed such a bare faced corruption in any country before.

Jackson's pronouncement - that a "corrupt bargain" between Adams and Clay trumped the will of the people and cost him the election - will forever tarnish the 1824 election and the reputations of his two opponents.

With that the 56 year old General resigns from the Senate and rides back home to Tennessee, with the firm commitment to defeat Adams in the 1828 election and oppose Clay at every future step of the way.

Meanwhile Clay recognizes that the political landscape has just shifted and that the DemocraticRepublican's hope to continue governing as a "party of national unity" is not sustainable.

He has secured for himself the "stepping stone" position as Secretary of State, but winning the presidency will now require new policies, and perhaps a new party, to defeat Andrew Jackson.
