As analysts and investigators, we see a lot of faces. Whether it's from looking at booking photos, scanning surveillance video, or scouring a suspect's social media account, we are constantly searching for faces. This course is designed to show you how to apply search techniques to searchable law enforcement photo databases to filter results and potentially identify a possible suspect. Emphasis will be placed on the types of suspects, scenarios, and crime types that make good candidates for this search technique. The presenter will also discuss how to back your findings with additional information pulled from other investigative and public resources.

Several real-world examples of successful suspect searches will be discussed as well as basic facial identification practices that can be used when manually comparing photos of your unknown suspect to potential candidates.

The following topics will be covered during the presentation:

• Types of searchable law enforcement photo databases
• How to apply search filters to effectively search LE photo databases
• When to use a photo database filter search / the four criteria
• Identifying physical "identifiers" and suspect geographical clues
• Tattoo searches
• Facial identification and comparison practices
• Suspect verification practices
• Presenting your findings
• Facial identification training information
