FEATHERS IN THE WIND

Do you ever watch the show "What Would You Do?" It has recently resurfaced on television on Sunday nights, rather than in its former slot on Friday night.

Anyway, I have a puzzle for you to solve. There is no "right" answer, really, but I am curious as to what you would do.

A couple of years ago, I was at the "Crowded Closet" in Iowa City. This is a discount store run by Mennonite charities that sells donated items. We have donated items such as clothes, books, crafts and etc. to this store through the years, often leaving the store having bought far more than we donated.

I was checking out the books recently and came to a book about Irish history and poetry. Being an English major and librarian, I naturally looked for pictures. I paged through the book and found that some of the pages were lumpy. I cannot stand that. I also get upset with dog-eared pages, people who draw and underline on pages and so on. I am sort of a compulsive bibliophile, I guess.

Well, I went to through the pages and found a twenty dollar bill. Naturally, I figured this was a "nice" way to book mark a book. Could it be possible that there were more such bookmarks inside? There were! I looked around, no one was near. Should I put the book back? Should I take it and the money? Should I give it to the clerk, who may or may not keep it themselves? What would you do?

It is interesting how temptation came to me, a subtle reminder of how important it is to always remember that we should always act as we want others to act toward us, and to act in a way that pleases God.

Drought Monitor Iowa Spring 2024

While this is being written on Tuesday, April 2, a light rain is falling in the western Amana Colonies. Since Monday evening, at about the time the Iowa Hawkeye women were soundly beating LSU to gain their berth in the Final Four of the NCAA tournament, it has been raining on and off. As of 9 a.m. Tuesday, 6/10ths of an inch of rain had fallen in West Amana.

Hopefully, more rain will fall April 2 – 5. This rain will certainly help, however, the drought that has enveloped Iowa for the past 4 years according to US Drought Monitor, is still very much in evidence. As of March 31, eastern Iowa was suffering a moderate to extreme drought according to the US Drought Monitor produced by the USDA, the National Drought Mitigation Center and NOAA. You can check their website at droughtmonitor.unl.edu.

In our neck of the woods, specifically the north-eastern corner of Iowa County, we are considered to be in an "extreme drought" by the US Drought Monitor. An extreme drought is just 1 classification above an "exceptional drought" which is the worst possible class of drought. According to their definition an extreme drought means that there are both short-term and long-term consequences to the water table, evidenced by low or no stream flows and low river flows and drier than average subsoils. Areas of extreme drought can expect plant life impacts, crop and pasture losses and water shortages.

A snowy January helped, but a drier February did not. A wetter than average April would be a big help. Forecasters do see reason to hope the drought will lessen as rainfall is expected in April they claim, but again it will take several months of above average rainfall/ snow to lessen the long-term impacts. Every bit of moisture is a help to short-term effects. According to the Monthly US Drought Outlook, eastern Iowa is expected to remain in drought, but conditions will improve in April as rain is predicted. The western half of the state will fare better with the northwestern portion of the state returning to near normal and the southwestern seeing a lessening of drought conditions too. Again, this prediction depends upon rain.
