

Seven year old Odom is a very special guy. He's earned a good life in his retirement, but he's not planning on doing it sitting down. He's got an elevated self-image and a strong opinion about how things should be, as is common for little Dachshunds.

He loves to snuggle and be the center of attention. He has some toys that he plays with, but would prefer to be petted and loved on.

He's good with cats and dogs so long as they agree to do things on his terms and respect his elevated place.

He firmly believes that he should be fed first and that all the food placed out is for him. He also firmly believes that if he can sit next to you while you are eating that all food is to be shared only with him and is quite clear about this to his housemates.

He can be quite vocal with grumbles about this, but with firm and gentle guidance, he can easily be redirected back into place.

Odom would truly benefit from a home that is more structured as he can easily try to run the show. He has so much love to share and needs a home that can appreciate his little quirks.
