

Robert Dennis

Robert Dennis writes, recites the poems and sings the songs of the western life, from a lifelong love affair with where he lives, Western South Dakota. He comes from a long line of musical people and is thrilled that his sons and grandchildren seem to be following along in those footsteps.

Robert has performed in most of the surrounding states and a few a far ways away! He has been invited and performed at Elko, at the National Cowboy Poetry Gathering on three occasions. Robert has a CD of his original songs, Rusted Rowels, and a new one in the works.

Robert and his wife Cindy are the fourth generation on the family ranch, started at the turn of the last century by Robert's great grandfather and his two son's.. Robert uses horses, both saddle horses and a team, in his day to day work on the family ranch. He has a deep respect and appreciation for the culture and those who came before us and left a well marked trail to follow, with the traditions and time honored and tested ways of the western cattle industry. Robert's songs and poems reflect these traditions and lifestyle. When he sings a song or recites a poem, he hopes he is doing his part to pass on the mantle to the next generation who will someday join the great cow clan!
