Psalms 27: 1-2 (NKJV)

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?

²When the wicked came against me to eat up my flesh, my enemies and foes, they stumbled and fell.

The Lord is the lifter of our heads. We should cast all our cares upon him for he cares for us.

ORLANDO, Fla. – The next name on the 2020 list is raising some questions as to who actually names these storms. Isaias, pronounced ees-ah-EE-ahs is the next name up in the Atlantic Basin. If you're wondering, Isaias is the Late Latin and Spanish form of the Hebrew name Isaiah from the Bible.

If you're looking for the short answer as to who names the storms, the World Meteorological Organization has the responsibility for naming the storms that impact the Atlantic Basin. Headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland, the WMO is a specialized agency of the United Nations whose mandate covers weather, climate and water resources. You would think NOAA's National Hurricane Center would have that responsibility, but that's not the case. The WMO follows their own strict guidelines for the naming of storms. The list of names currently alternates between male and female and are on a six-year rotation. According to the WMO The names selected are those that are familiar to the people in each region. Storms are named for people to easily understand and remember the tropical cyclone/hurricane/typhoon in their region, thus facilitating disaster risk awareness, preparedness, management and reduction. The pre-designated list of names is proposed by the members that are relevant to where the storms may impact.
