

Paul Larson

Paul acquired many talents before makes his home in the sacred Black Hills of South Dakota, just a bit outside the small community of Rochford. He's spent several years on the road competing in and judging rodeos. He qualified and competed in Charleston SC at the Worlds finals Rodeo in 1997 in the team roping event. His talent serves him well in South Dakota as many a neighbor call upon him for round ups and brandings. He is also an accomplished carpenter and takes much pride in custom building. Whether it be a patio, log cabin in the Hills, or remodeling an building from the 1800's in Deadwood all are impressed with his artisanship, honesty, and commitment. His history of performing in rodeos and creating with a hammer and nail made following his passion for music a seamless transformation in the fabric that makes this cowboy. Known for his baritone voice and cowboy yodel, he was once introduced by an announcer as a man with the voice he'd hire to ride circles around a rangey herd of cows to keep them quiet through the evening.

Paul is grateful to have the opportunity to write and play his music in many places, but likes most to sing with his good friends on the radio, at Cowboy Poet Gatherings, The Moonshine Gulch Saloon in Rochford, and the area that surrounds him. There's also a good chance you could catch him on the front porch of his cabin with his guitar and his dog, Rascal.
