Description

Trauma-informed expressive arts and play therapy integrates neurodevelopmental knowledge and the sensory qualities of the arts in trauma including the following: 1) how the mind and body respond to traumatic events; 2) recognition that symptoms are adaptive coping strategies rather than pathology; 3) emphasis on cultural sensitivity and empowerment; and 4) helping to move individuals from being not only survivors, but ultimately to becoming "thrivers" through skill building, support networks, and resilience enhancement. During this three-day course, participants will learn how to apply expressive arts within the framework of play therapy with children, adolescents and families, with an emphasis on neurodevelopment; the importance of safety and the window of tolerance in creative intervention; self-regulation approaches; body-resourcing; and the role of resilience and posttraumatic growth in trauma reparation and recovery. Attendees will experience a variety of creative interventions in order to learn how to integrate these approaches in work with traumatized children, youth, families and groups.

Participants attending all 3 days will get a Trauma Informed Expressive Arts Therapy Level 1 Certificate.
