53 SUNDAYS 2012 Missionaries to Pray for, Points to Ponder

"I will lift up my eyes to the mountains" Psalm 121:1

In this passage, the psalmist gains a new perspective of the great and awesome God he serves as he looks unto the mountains. He is greatly encouraged as he considers the mountains and the view or perspective they provided for him in his distress. He knew that His God was creator of the mountains and that God's watchful eyes were always upon him-even in the darkest of times.

So, when those times of doubt or despair come, may we be like the psalmist. May we look unto the mountains and seek to see things from God's perspective..

Missionary Highlight

Ron & Alpha Goombi, NAMB Missionaries
Omaha, Nebraska

Native Americans often have hard lives, especially those who live on reservations. Poverty and alcoholism are often present. Alpha Goombi knows about it. She is a Kiowa Indian who grew up in Carnegie, Oklahoma. She said she grew up amid anti-Indian prejudice, which led to her having low self-esteem. "I hated Christians, both white and Indian," she once told a women's group.

She became an alcoholic; often her husband and son had to go looking for her and bring her home totally drunk. A Southern Baptist missionary came to her town and came often to witness. At first she was not interested. But then after one especially bad period of drunkenness, she decided she needed Jesus as her Savior. She went to church that night and ran down the aisle when the invitation was given. Now she and her husband, Ron, serve as North American missionaries. They live on the Omaha Indian Reservation near Omaha, Nebraska, where they started the first church in 2009. They also work on two other reservations.

"You can change the world by going out and telling someone about Jesus," Alpha said. "When you give and when you pray, and when you send missionaries, it gives life to somebody like me!" One of her constant prayer requests is about alcohol. "Pray God will break the alcohol bondage of our people," she asks. Alpha's life shows how God can convert hatred to love. Let us join her in praying that all Native Americans across our land can come to faith in Christ. Our Cooperative Program support helps keep missionaries like Alpha on many reservations.
