LeavesThe Rules of Golf

take the seasons into consideration, including the time of year when leaves are dropping faster than the Dow Jones

If a course has a local rule allowing the natural accumulation of leaves to be treated as ground under repair, and it's known or virtually certain that your ball is lost under leaves, you may find the nearest point of relief from the spot where the ball last crossed the outermost limit of the leaves, and take a drop, without penalty, within one club-length of that point, no closer to the hole (Rule 25-1, Decision 33-8/31).

Without a local rule, leaves are loose impediments. You can't move your ball when removing leaves or it's a one-stroke penalty, and the ball must be replaced. The same is true if you're searching through leaves and the ball moves. But if your ball is covered by leaves in a bunker or a water hazard, there's no penalty if the ball moves during a search. Just replace the ball and cover it with leaves, if necessary, so only part of the ball is visible (Rule 18-2, 12-1). If you find your ball in leaves piled for removal, you can drop it, without penalty, within one club-length of the nearest point of relief, no closer to the hole (Rule 25-1b).

Fun Fact.....

The Stymie Rule

Golf isn't a sport where you can play defense against your opponent, but once you could. For many years in singles match play, a person wasn't allowed to move his or her ball on the green even if it was directly in an opponent's path. A player facing the obstacle while trying to hole out was known as being "stymied." They could either try to putt around an opponent's ball or putt or chip over it. There were revisions to this rule over the years before it was totally abolished worldwide in 1952.
