What Makes a Good Breeder?

Guidelines to "good" dog breeding.

By D. Caroline Coile, Ph.D.

What makes a good breeder? Remember those five words the next time you want to start an argument among dog breeders.

Somebody will start with the basics: A good breeder is somebody who breeds in order to improve the breed, breeds only superior stock, and isn't in it for the money. Somebody else may add that they must be willing to take back every puppy they breed for the rest of those dogs' lives. Another will stress that the breeding stock should all be proven in some competitive venue. Several will chime in that they shouldn't make money off their puppies, but rather breed as a labor of love. "Waiting lists!" somebody shouts, and everyone nods. They must have waiting lists before they breed. They must breed on a limited basis (a comment that leads to a gossip-fest filled with speculation about how many litters Miss Breedwell has produced that year alone). Things are going well until some newcomer finally pipes up and asks, "Why is it bad to make money? Why is it bad to breed a lot of litters? What if I just want a pet?"

That's what happened in a recent dog show list discussion of what makes a good breeder. Most people managed to agree – sort of – on the following criteria:

A good breeder breeds with the welfare of the puppies first and foremost in mind. Every breeder agreed enthusiastically to that. But how many of these same show breeders, when confronted with the choice of placing a dog in a situation where it could live on the road and become a famous show dog or live with a family and never be shown, would choose the latter? Would their choice really make one breeder better than the other?

A good breeder stands behind her puppies for life. But at what cost? Some breeders pointed out that the ultimate responsibility lies with the owner, not the breeder, of a dog. What would happen if a breeder had hordes of dogs returned at once? At what point does the breeder's responsibility for her own dogs, family and sanity take priority?

A good breeder refrains from breeding litters in which there is a good chance of producing unhealthy puppies. That means health testing the parents (and better, their siblings and other relatives) and avoiding doubling up on possible carriers of genetic diseases. But even this statement is not without contention – some breeders maintained no dog should be bred if it has ever produced a single disease, even if that disease isn't known to be genetic. Others balked, saying this was throwing the stud dog out with the bathwater and decreasing genetic diversity.

A good breeder strives to produce good examples of the breed. Simply because somebody "only" wants a pet, the fact that they chose a pure breed indicates they did so expecting it to look and act a certain way. But here's where breeders disagreed: At what point does a dog cease to be a good example? Is merely being identifiable as its breed sufficient, or must it be more?

After that, agreement went downhill. Sure, the criteria sounded good and certainly were nothing new to seasoned breeders. But how reasonable are they in the real world? Breeding is a big responsibility, but the dog world is not a one-size-fits-all universe.

A good breeder breeds to improve the breed and tests her breeding stock in various competitive venues. Sharyn Hutchens, herself a respected breeder of the highly successful Timbreblue Whippets in Lexington, Va., points out the limited nature of that view: "Dog showing is a hobby that perhaps 1 percent of dog owners are involved in. For those of us who want to show, that's great. But showing is not the only reason to breed.

Dogs are pets first and foremost, and there is no shame in producing healthy, happy pets for loving homes. When did we decide that no one in the world should breed except show people? And what gives us the right to proclaim that?"

A good breeder breeds only on a limited basis. That's an oversimplification. For some breeders, one litter is too many. They don't have the breeding stock, potential buyers, facilities, or time needed to produce a litter responsibly. For others, several litters a year is not too much. It depends on the breed, the market, and their ability to stand behind their dogs. Hutchens points out other considerations: "If good breeders (and I mean show breeders and responsible, caring pet breeders) stop breeding or cut way back, that leaves the market wide open for breeders who forget the puppy and new owner as soon as the check is cashed. And they are the ones producing the dogs that end up in shelters. If a good breeder is capable of and willing to produce a litter of quality pups that she may or may not keep one from, then that's one less litter that will come from a bad breeder. We have allowed bad breeders to simply shove us right out of the marketplace and by chanting the animal rights 'overpopulation' song, we are doing more damage to our breeds than we know. We've allowed many of them to be essentially taken over by people who don't do health testing, don't provide owner support, don't screen homes."

A good breeder loses money on every litter. This point has been used for years to differentiate hobby breeders from puppy millers. But why should making money on hard work and a good "product" necessarily be a bad thing? It is a bad thing if you cut corners to do it – if, for example, you feed cheap food, forgo genetic testing, and shirk on veterinary services. It is a bad thing if your primary motivation is to make money rather than produce healthy, happy dogs. But is there a reason, besides dissuading new breeders, that losing money has become a prerequisite for breeding a good litter?

What makes a good breeder? "A good breeder is one who breeds the healthiest puppies possible both [mentally and physically], breeds as close to the standard as possible, screens homes carefully, provides support for owners, treats people fairly, and should a home not work out, either helps find the pup another home or takes it back," says Hutchens. Then why do breeders make it sound so hard? As Hutchens says, "There is something about breeding dogs that turns us all into church ladies doing the 'superior walk.'"

There are still more irresponsible, bad breeders out there than good, responsible ones. Could it be that by adding so many impossible criteria we're only discouraging the responsible ones?

Minutes for Board Meeting of December 17, 2014

Board Members in Attendance –

Suzanne Faria – President, Penny Schroeder – Treasurer, Nancy R. Hall – Interim Secretary, Mary Ellen Barragan – Membership Committee Chair, Carol Sowders – Judges Education Committee Chair, Alice Mirestes – Webmaster, Stacy Faw – Newsletter Editor.

1. Minutes of the prior Meeting of October 2014 were read, and unanimously approved via a motion.
2. The complete Report of the Treasurer was unavailable due to technical difficulties and to be submitted at such time as the information becomes available, however, membership renewals are being received with a tentative count of 13 couple memberships and 29 individual memberships.
3. Committee Reports:

Judges Education - Carol Sowders reported the Judges Education, which occurred at the Eukanuba event in Florida, had garnered positive responses.

Health & Research – No report was available

Newsletter – Stacy Faw reminded the Board submissions had been due by 12/15/2014 adding due dates for each newsletter are by quarter, i.e. 3/15, 6/15, 9/15 and 12/15. A discussion regarding content included possible information related to “vision”, having a special “feature” and being printable if an effort to have the newsletter available at Meet the Breed events, etc. Nancy Hall offered to send the PIP to all active members via email to possibly expand readership.

Membership – Mary Ellen Barragan h are in place for the annual membership letter.

4. Unfinished Business:

- A. The redesign of the website to be scheduled during the Christmas and New Years holidays. Information regarding the periods the web would be unavailable would be posted to the FB public site.
- B. The progress for completion requirements and details of the Versatility Titles Program is nearly complete and pending approval of the Board upon receipt of the program document by Carol Sowders. It was suggested a “glossary” of sorts be added to facilitate the understanding of a “cold-reader”.
- C. Facebook disclaimers are to be in conjunction with the AKC parent Club page and facilitated by Stacy Faw.
- D. Those members responding to the Questionnaire / Survey for future participation has been positive and informative. Many were interested in assuming a greater role within the various committees.

5. New Business topics:

- A. Memorandum Item Subsequent to the October Board Meeting - Acceptance of a pending Resignation – Stephanie Clark
- B. Nancy Hall was nominated and approved as the PPPA Board Representative to chair the 2015/2016 Nominating Committee. The slate of potential candidates is to be submitted for approval at the February Board Meeting.

6. Adjournment was unanimously approved via motion at 7PM PST

3. Reports of Committees:

A. Judges Education – There was a positive response at the Eukanuba Show. No decision was made regarding the next Chair for this committee, although discussion did include it need NOT be a Board Member, but must be a member of the committee and make a report for the submission to Board were it not a Board Member.

B. Health & Research – Tabled

C. Newsletter – Tabled

D. Membership – The report of Mary Ellen Barragan advised of pending applications and those requesting reinstatement due to late payments of dues. Additionally, 75 letters were to be sent to members in good standing as a result of their dues payments. Penny added there were a limited number of person who did not renew based on a question from Sandy regarding membership trending.

4. Unfinished Business:

A. Status of the Versatility Title Program – Per a conversation with Karen Conroy, at present, Carol has been unwilling to provide the Program Document, Suzanne agreed to speak directly with Carol to complete and submit for approval to the Board.

B. Nancy - Nomination Committee Report noted the committee as Jean Evenoff, Debbie Leone, Candace Hanscom, and Vickie Ganser explaining the demographics utilized for this selection, i.e. a breeder and long term member, a pet owner but participate in confirmation, a long term fancier of multiple breeds, and a representative for breed confirmation competing with the national standings with each representative of different geographic locations such as the mid-west with the highest concentration of membership, No. CA with the greatest concentration of confirmation participation, along with Nevada, and the No. West.

C. PPP Health Fund – A lively discussion regarding fund raising with recommendations for possible items that occur with other breed organization, such as the Border Terrier Annual Calendar. Additionally, questions arose regarding a statistical analysis related the genetics, how a survey could be conducted and the concerns regarding privacy. Sandy Gillen agreed to speak with a some she is familiar with and report this information to the chair.
