NSBEA TODAY

WINTER 2014

Winter Evenings, Board Games, and NSBEA

What is the Connection?

Deb Wolken, NSBEA President

In the spirit of long winter evenings, WINNING WITH NSBEA-The Board Game has been created highlighting the benefits of Nebraska State Business Education.

Although it will not be likely that Parker Brothers will soon be interested in buying the rights of this unique “board game,” I might suggest you print off (or electronically send) this NSBEA BOARD GAME page and share with a colleague. One of our obligations as a member is to encourage business/technology teachers we know to become members of our professional organization.

Your membership is appreciated and vital, and we are all winners (including our students!!) when Nebraska business teachers become and remain professionally involved.

My suggestion for one of these long winter evenings is to shut off the electronics (gasp!!), put away those “to be graded” papers (another gasp!!), and pull out your favorite Parker Brothers board game. Any time is a good time to be a NSBEA member but it’s also a great time of the year to enjoy the simplicity of an old-fashioned Monopoly, Clue or Trivial Pursuit game.

Please take time to recognize your fellow NSBEA Members

To nominate an individual/business for any of the awards listed on page 5, you need to submit the correct nomination form, biographical data sheet, and nomination criteria sheet. ALL INFORMATION AND FORMS CAN BE FOUND ON THE NSBEA WEB SITE: www.nsbea.org

Completed forms must be postmarked by April 1, 2014, and mailed to the NSBEA State Awards Committee Chairperson:

Shelly Mowinkel, President-Elect

It is that time of the year, when I reflect upon the fall semester and start planning out my spring semester classes. As I reflected, many ideas and lessons race through my mind, however two things really stick out—creativity and failure. My vision for my classroom is inspiring lifelong learning and positive, responsible citizenship. My goal is to be an innovative teacher who stresses creativity, problem solving and critical thinking. So there they are...my classroom goals and visions...and the reasons why the two themes of creativity and failure probably stick out as I reflect.

I have a quote on my wall from Albert Einstein, “Creativity is intelligence having fun.” One area of success in my classroom is the constant pursuit of encouraging creativity, not only in my students, but also myself. It is not too often when the students and I don’t talk about the importance of creativity and how it can lead to new ways of accomplishing tasks. I am reminded that if I am encouraging creativity with my students, I should expect it of myself. Teaching technology has always provided me the opportunities to challenge myself for innovative lessons...because it is ever-changing. Many times, sites and apps that I used last year, have been updated or even no longer exist. Thus giving me the opportunity to create something new.

However, this is also where failure can make its entrance into my teaching. Challenging myself to create one new innovative lesson per unit does open the doors for failure...and I must admit sometimes EPIC FAILURES! One such lesson occurred this past fall. I planned and planned and then planned some more for a new lesson with my Computer 7 class. When the day came to implement the lesson with the students, it was disastrous! Yep, disastrous...but I used the lesson as a teaching moment. The students and I discussed how learning should actually take place in the midst of failure. As we continued the day’s lesson, students found themselves “Googling ideas and questions” to come up with solutions to fix our problem. Yes, the lesson itself didn’t go as I had planned, but I was able to make it a teachable moment. The students seeing that I had “failed” made the lesson life-changing for them, as they were able to see that learning actually took place when together we started the lesson over with new, better ideas.

As I begin to look forward to the spring semester, my passion for teaching will continue to drive me to create innovative life-changing lessons. And throughout this process, I will continue to learn from the failures, because maybe that is where my best learning and teaching takes place!

As teachers we all have our passions for certain subjects or topics, the question becomes, “How can we creatively share our passions with our students?” All of us are creative in some way. The lessons students remember are the ones where they see and feel the teacher’s passion for what they do. As the new year begins, many times we set new resolutions and goals. I encourage you to set a goal: tap into your creativity and develop a lesson that actively engages your students. Whether the lesson is a success or a failure (if you are like me), learning will take place.

NSBEA Fall Conference Highlights—Lincoln

It was a day that had something for everyone! Conference Committee Chairs Lindsay Tillinghast and Matt Maw coordinated an impressive agenda on Saturday morning, October 12. More than 24 members were treated to excellent speakers and a fun and insightful tour. One member stated, “it was the best fall conference ever!”

The highlights:

A vision of Business Education from Dean Donde Plowman of UNL’s College of Business Administration. Dean Plowman explained the Minor in Business option available to all UNL students—“You may not major in business but you will probably work in one.”

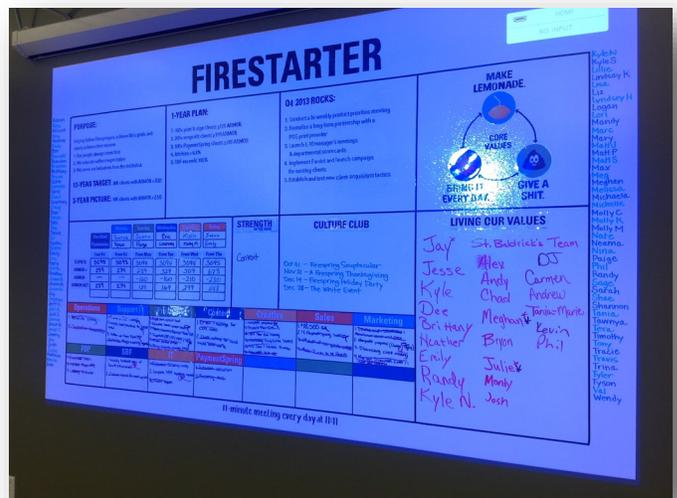

Jeff Spain of Assurity Life Insurance took a different approach to the topic of insurance with some heart-warming stories. He shared three ‘take aways’ for potential employee candidates:

- Your work ethic is vital; be sure you differentiate yourself from the competition.
- Conditioning will beat ability every day.
- Develop a passion! Be the best you can be!

Randy Hawthorne, Vice President of Business Development of Firespring then led a tour of their modern and unique facility. Highlights included industrial printing equipment, big screen TVs, the snack bar, and, of course, the ‘slide’ to get from second floor to first floor! There was a general sense that employees sincerely enjoyed working at Firespring.

Randy Hawthorn of Firespring shares one of the production rooms with NSBEA Fall Conference attendees.

Firespring has an eleven minute meeting every day at 11:11 a.m.

Fremont High School has Nebraska's First National Business Honor Society

Matt Burg

The Business Department at Fremont High School was just awarded a charter in the National Business Honor Society. Fremont High School is the first high school in the state of Nebraska to be awarded a chapter in this prestigious organization.

The objectives of the NBHS include promoting and recognizing academic achievement in business education at the secondary level, while fostering and recognizing leadership skills and character development.

The society is open to students who have Junior or Senior class standing and have taken at least 3 business classes. Students must also maintain a 3.5 GPA in business classes, as well as a 3.0 overall GPA in order to be eligible to receive an invitation into the chapter. Student selection is handled by a committee of FHS staff, consisting of business instructors, regular education instructors, a representative from the administration and guidance counselors.

The initial idea was brought to our attention by a former FHS business instructor, Wanda Samson and current FHS business teacher Kristen Strickler. "Wanda thought it would be a way to benefit our students and provide a way for them to be recognized. We have many outstanding students who excel in business classes at Fremont High School, but until now they have largely gone unrecognized."

Matt Burg, business department chair, points out, Mrs. Strickler did the legwork on this and deserves most of the credit. She brought the idea to the department, and we all thought it was a great idea to provide our students with a chance to be recognized while enhancing their portfolios and resumes."

The inaugural class of inductees will be chosen at the beginning of the second semester, with the induction ceremony taking place in early May 2014.

For details about the National Business Honor Society, please visit their website at www.nbea.org.

For an interview or further information, please contact Matt Burg at 402-657-0371.

So, You Don't Teach Human Resources? Think Again! You Really Do! Try These Projects in Your Business Classes!

Dr. Patricia Arneson, Wayne State College

When high school graduates enter college, most students think of the 'traditional' business majors as Accounting or Finance, Management or Marketing. They are totally unaware that HR is one of the fastest-growing business majors in colleges and universities. In fact, most high school graduates are not really sure what a future career in HR really entails and what an excellent specialized management career choice it is!

In our Business Education BMIT curriculum at Wayne State College, prospective business educators take Human Resource Management as a requirement. Instead of studying management theories and theorists, students engage in career- and employment-related active learning projects that relate well to career education and workplace learning at middle and secondary levels. The projects that we do at the collegiate level can easily be modified for middle and secondary levels. As professor of Human Resources and SHRM (Society for Human Resource Management) advisor, I'd like to share examples of HR projects and activities that can be incorporated into many business and/or technology classes.

CITY CULTUREGRAM

Students select an American city and research what it is like to live, work and play in that city. Students research cost of living, using any Salary Wizard to compare a $25,000 income against cost of living for their selected city. Additional categories include cost-of-living comparisons for housing, price of a movie ticket, etc., as well as crime rate, transportation, education, shopping, restaurants, sports teams, and of course, major employers for that city! A 3-column flyer created in Word or Publisher must include reference sources and appropriate graphics.

COUNTRY CULTUREGRAM. Students select another country and research the protocols, etiquette and do's/don'ts of doing business in that country! There are many websites, but an excellent resource is the popular, inexpensive book Kiss, Bow and Shake Hands: Doing Business in 60 Countries. This is NOT a travel flyer, but a business guide outlining business practices, gift giving, dining etiquette. Again, students must create a 3-column flyer with references and graphics.

IDEAL EMPLOYER. Students select an employer firm of their choice. It may be a company in their city or state, or one selected from the "100 Best Companies to Work for in America" list that is released annually each January. The 1-page flyer briefly summarizes the nature of the business, its headquarters

FORTUNE location and officers, but the important aspect of the flyer must identify a 100 Best Companies bulleted list of key reasons why employees like working for that company.

JOB DESCRIPTION and JOB AD. When researching possible jobs of interest, students present their findings by creating a one-page Job Description. The "header identification" section requires students to research the O*Net and DOT (Dictionary of Occupational Titles) job codes, whether the job is exempt/non-exempt, job title and department. Section 2 of the Description requires students to write a 2-5 sentence Job Overview which summarizes the basic nature of the job. Section 3 lists 7-10 basic job duties, whereas Section 4 is the Job Specifications section which describes minimal (1) education, (2) experience, (3) skills, (4) the working environment, and (5) required licenses or certifications. Of course, an "Equal Employment Employer" statement must be included! (There are also Job Description templates available if you do not want students to create their own.) After preparing the Job Description, students then write the JOB AD by first creating a 1-inch wide grid box to replicate a newspaper classified. Students first study actual job ads from newspapers, magazines and online postings, then create their own!

PERSONALITY TESTING. When discussing pre-employment testing (background and credit checks, reference checking, medical or drug testing, etc.), personality testing should be included. A free personality test is available at www.keirsey.com by clicking on the "Personality Temperament Sorter." Students complete the 70-question inventory and receive an immediate email response with a Myers-Briggs type assessment (i.e. ESTJ). Students then go to www.personality.com and click on the "Shakespeare" icon which explains their personality assessment. The "double arrow" icon reveals possible career paths. Please note: A 70-question inventory can be neither valid nor reliable, but it does provide students an example of Myers-Briggs inventory testing.

are the cornerstone of society. For they are given to serving and preserving our most important social institutions.

IDEALISTS
Idealists are passionately concerned with personal growth and development. Their quest for self-knowledge drives their imagination.

RATIONALS
Rationals are the problem solving temperament. They are rigorously logical and value competence and ingenuity above all.

ARTISANS
Artisans want to be where the action is. Spontaneous, adaptable, and competitive, they believe today must be enjoyed.

What's your personality type?

CAREER BRANDING. Students use Word or Publisher to create a career brand poster after studying examples. "Career Branding" encourages students to consider careers in specific general occupations, such as teaching, real estate, nursing, the military, etc. Encourage your students to select a career from the Career Cluster grid.

PERSONAL BRANDING. There are SO MANY projects that can be done for personal branding, wherein students are promoting themselves. To highlight their unique skills and talents they bring to the workplace, they could create a personalized poster or even create a 1-minute video! You've heard of the 30-second or 1-minute "elevator pitch." This is another great project for students to "brand" themselves!

SPEED INTERVIEWING. Students love this project! Using employers, other faculty and even other students, this is an employment version of "speed dating!" The announcer (employer) reads an employment interview question. Tables with chairs on both sides are spaced throughout the room. After the question is read, the student interviewee provides their answer within a brief time span (usually 1- 3 minutes) to the interviewer. Following their response, the interviewer provides brief feedback to the interviewee. Then, the student "moves down" to the next table.

I'm happy to email you sample templates of the City and Country Culturegrams, Ideal Employer flyer, Career Brand poster and Job Description and Ad. Simply email me at paames1@wsc.edu.

'Tis the Season Cathy Nutt, President

Well maybe it's not the season as you're reading it, but as I am writing this we are smack dab in the middle of the holiday season, and I love this time of year, the lights, the music, the time off, but honestly what I love the most is gift giving. I enjoy watching my girls open their presents, and I love watching their imaginations and creativity flow as they play with their new gadgets, electronic devices and things that don't take batteries or a cord to plug into the wall. You know, come to think of it, it's the same reason I am proud to be a part of Delta Pi Epsilon (DPE).

What??? How can I connect these two very different worlds? Did you know that DPE is the affiliate of NBEA that supports and promotes scholarship by engaging in quality research, leadership by improving teaching and cooperation by building professionalism and practicing teamwork? That research and opportunities for leadership and cooperation are kind of like the presents under the Christmas tree... and we, business educators, get to open the "gifts" of these efforts. They allow us to use our imagination and creative ability to become better educators for our students.

DPE awards grant money every year to researchers to further the advancement and extension of business education. DPE gives a gift (grant) to help fund those researchers who we, as business educators, ultimately learn new techniques and concepts from. Have you ever bought raffle tickets for the DPE raffle during the NCE Conference in June? Did you know that you were giving a gift as well? The state chapter sends a portion of those funds earned to the national research foundation every year.

So this is how I connect those two very different worlds... I love that DPE is ultimately about giving the "gift" of better education for our students. Would you like to learn more about our honorary society? Ask anyone of our state DPE officers or visit the website at www.dpe.org.

DPE Outstanding Educator Award Nominations

It is time for nominations for the 2014 DPE Outstanding Educator Award. Please think about a business educator you could nominate for this prestigious award. There are so many deserving DPE members who should be nominated. Think of someone who is a leader and possesses innovative ideas, effective teaching techniques and creative teaching approaches and nominate that person for the 2014 DPE Outstanding Educator of the Year Award.

Jean Condon is serving as the 2014 DPE Outstanding Educator Awards Chairperson and would like to receive many nominations. All you need to do to nominate a deserving DPE member is email that person’s name and contact information to Jean Condon. Jean will verify that the nominee is a current DPE member, gather the necessary information from the nominee, and present that information to the awards selection committee.

Please don’t delay; nominate that person TODAY! Just send the name of your nominee and their contact information to Jean Condon at condonj@mpcc.edu by March 1, 2014.

After March 1, 2014, current and previous nominees will receive instructions on completing and/or updating award applications.

The new recipient will be announced at the NSBEA/DPE Banquet during the NCE Conference in Kearney in June. Past recipients of the DPE Outstanding Educator Awards are:
