A Note from Rick: Markets were steady to weaker on Tuesday at TLA. The dairy market was steady with a very light test. The calf market was steady and has been very steady for quite some time now. Calf numbers are down considerably from a year ago, but prices are much better. The Slaughter Market continues to be under a lot of pressure with several packing plants either closed or operating on a limited basis. Prices reflected that again this week. Hopefully this situation will start to improve in the near future, but it's definitely going to take an extended period of time to get caught back up when things get opened. The hay market continued to be very active and the number of loads of hay offered was down. This pushed prices slightly higher and I look for this to continue for a couple more weeks or until we get into new hay. We are excited to start to open back up according to the new guidelines for Indiana. We are in the process of making plans to respect and adhere to the Governor's mandates, while also trying to make sure that our buyers and sellers have the best possible market. See you at TLA!
