Mobbing Causes Anguish, Destroys Teamwork, Contributes To Violence

You've seen it – but didn't know what it was.

You may have experienced it – and people thought you were crazy or over reacting or had done something wrong.

You may have joined it – but didn't understand the impact of what happened to the target

Mobbing Methods: Rumors, Discrediting, Isolation, Intimidation, Humiliation, Harassment, Cruelty

Mobbing Outcomes: Confusion, fear, physical illness, anxiety, social misery, PTSD, paranoia, suicide, homicide, permanent disability

Mobbing looks personal but is an organizational dynamic that becomes intensely personal

Some common characteristics of the perpetrators of mass killings are isolation, paranoia, feelings of persecution, preoccupation with survival. People who are being mobbed are often isolated first by others and then engage in self-isolation due to fear. They may develop feelings of paranoia and not know who can be trusted. Personality changes may occur. They often suffer from post traumatic stress disorder just as those who have witnessed disasters, have been mugged, raped, or gone through war may experience.

The target of mobbing/bullying behavior may become the aggressor. Something snaps. The target can't take any more mistreatment and retaliates, either spontaneously or by a planned act of violence. When this type of horrific situation occurs, the person who retaliates by externalizing their anger and despair in an act of violence is the one held accountable. That is, if he is still alive, has not committed suicide after the act, which often is the case. Facts such as the target having been continually harassed, isolated, excluded, terrorized in the workplace, school or other environment, had their personal property ruined or stolen, and been subject to humiliation in countless ways pale in comparison to the action taken.

If you knew that the environment in your workplace or school had the potential to take a previously “normal” individual and, through subtle and continual abuse at the hands of peers and others, trigger this kind of personality change, wouldn't you want to take action? If you are thinking “that can't happen here,” please think again. Take another look. None of the places where extreme violence has occurred were in communities where people expected it or thought that it could happen to them.
