

Van Eaton said the management team has done a fine job of getting the plant running efficiently.

"Our management team has met those challenges and performed well in that area," he added. "So I'm pleased to say now we have a very well-running plant."

Heartland is now going through the process of contract signing for the wheat straw which is used in its product.

"It's going very successfully," Van Eaton said. "We've had a substantial increase in the level of participation from southeast Wyoming wheat growers. We are excited about that."

Van Eaton said Heartland will continue to look at new marketing and sales opportunities.

"They come to us almost every day," he said. "We are continuing our focus on the fencing market, but we are looking at other things right now to help complement that. Our testing data for product testing continues to come in favorably."
