Gratitude in Action: Our Way of Life

Listening is not always hearing. Hearing is not always a result of 'intentional' listening. It can be difficult to quietly, intentionally listen with a true focus on what is being said.

How many times do you listen as someone begins talking and soon find yourself drifting away, off into your own world of thoughts? A word, a phrase, a short story, can trigger thought responses about concerns in life that must be addressed. Words and stories can recall pleasant memories of times past. They can also send us into a state of daydreaming. In any of these situations, we have ceased listening and are disconnected from the one speaking.

Listening to and truly hearing the other person, is an art. Intently, or perhaps, intentionally, focusing on one speaking is a very essential part of listening and thus hearing. When we find our thoughts drifting, we must quickly pull them back to the moment.

Individuals, perhaps ourselves, are often misquoted or misunderstood because someone lost focus, checked out, and what was being said was not accurately heard. It was misinterpreted. We can also even hear and interpret what is said differently than the person next to us.

There are times, while listening to someone during conversation, we find ourselves mentally constructing our response when we haven't even heard, in their entirety, the comments or statements of the other person speaking. We are not mindfully present.

So, what is the answer? How can I be a better listener? How can I truly hear? If I do not listen to and hear someone speaking to me, how will I ever hear God? How will I know His voice? God may speak to me in silence. His voice may simply be in the air I breathe.

"... God sings, and I sing back.

The singing, I mean, can be as jubilant as the red of God-made tomatoes, as the soaring of a kite or the splashing of children in a pool. The singing is my heart's joyous response. But God's singing can also be as heavy as the fragrance of lilies in a funeral home, heavy as the news of a friend's grief. God's singing can be as light as harpsichord music or a spring outing, as sad as the howling of a night train or the evening news. It can be cheerful, enchanting, challenging, amusing. In everything we experience we can hear God singing, if we listen attentively."<sup>1</sup>
