Amy Slattery is the Founder and CEO of Odimo, a growing architecture practice based in Kansas City, Missouri. Amy is an entrepreneur, industry leader, and architect with 17 years of experience on some of the most notable projects in the Kansas City region. She created Odimo in 2015 as a collaborative of leaders serving clients in higher education, creative office and affordable housing with a vision-driven design approach. Her time at nationally recognized design and construction firms has given Amy diverse experience and knowledge on the balancing act of innovation and market-driven design results.

A graduate from the University of Kansas with international internship experience, Amy earned her Bachelors in Architecture in 2001. She is a registered architect in the states of Missouri, Nebraska, and Kansas, and holds her NCARB Certificate. Amy has been a LEED Accredited Professional since 2004, achieving Building Design and Construction specialty in 2011. Amy was recognized by Engineering-News Record as a Midwest Top 20 under 40 in 2012 and was an American Institute of Architects (AIA) National Young Architects Award recipient in 2011. She is a past president of KC CREW (Commercial Real Estate Women) and is a founding board member of the Heart of America International Institute for Sustainable Laboratories (I2SL). Amy is a design advocate in the Kansas City community, serving on multiple AIA Design Juries, the University of Missouri Department of Architectural Studies Advisory Board, and the University of Kansas School of Architecture Advisory Board.
