Substance use and abuse are increasingly problematic for youth today. As a result of easier access, efforts to decriminalize personal use, and the legalization of certain drugs, today's youth are much more accepting of drug use. Even youngsters who do not use drugs themselves are far more tolerant and accepting of drug use in others. This group will help youngsters develop skills to navigate this rapidly changing landscape, to understand the brain's response to drugs, and to consider alternatives to drug use.
