

Most Touching Scene in a Movie:

In the movie Eat, Love, Pray, Javier Bardem is recovering from a heart breaking divorce in Bali. He begins dating Julia Roberts who plays a divorcee in search of the meaning of life. During the first weeks of dating, Javier Bardem's college aged son comes to visit for a week. At the end of the week, it is time to say good-bye. During this good-bye scene, Javier Bardem begins crying because he is already missing his son. It is the most touching scene I have ever experienced in my life. It made me realize how precious time spent with your children really is.

I have the honor of seeing my son Alex every day. He is not only my son, but one of my best friends. Taylor has become the honorary Event Planner of our family. She makes sure that we eat together at least once a week, that we enjoy our backyard for dining, that we don't forget to meet for lunch or take a quick vacation just to be together. The good-bye scene probably brought Michael to mind the most. I am able to see him for just a couple of weeks each year and when he leaves, it is such a sad moment. My oldest son Brandon is on his own journey to find his place. He has spent several years working a job but has realized that it is not his passion and my passion speech ("Find your passion and do it every day of your life, because everything else is just a job") is beginning to ring real clear in his life. He has begun a journey to find his passion.

There is also a quote in the movie that better describes my wife than anything I have ever heard before:

"I'm here. I love you. I don't care if you need to stay up crying all night long, I will stay with you. There's nothing you can ever do to lose my love. I will protect you until you die, and after your death I will still protect you. I am stronger than Depression and I am braver than Loneliness and nothing will ever exhaust me."
